

*Operation Failsafe
The Untold Story Of Scott Sutton*

Andrew Sutton 1952

A short story about a man called Scott Sutton who is created by the Nazis in 1945 before the end of World War Two, he was the very first full human hybrid test tube baby named the youngling, once created he was frozen until he was surgically implanted in to his mother to be, the true Aryan female. Scott was born in 1965, brought up by a poor but loving family unknowingly guarded by a secret society of Nazi sympathizers, at the age of 18 he leaves home to have his own family, at the age of 45 he's a father of 5 children, 2 girls, 3 boys, but he becomes ill when doctors discover his pituitary gland has switched off producing testosterone and is driven to the brink of insanity after his medication is swapped for a serum created by Doctor Josef Mengele in World War two which is administered by a nurse at his doctors every two weeks, the nurse who was part of a secret organization called the Vrill Society which was run by Scott's own uncle Hans, this serum grows a tumour that completely covers Scott's entire brain changing his personality turning him into a sinister Nazi. Uncle Hans real name is Hans Friedrich Karl Franz Kammler, Hans was a German civil engineer and high-ranking officer of the Schutzstaffel in World War Two. During the war Hans Kammler was intrusted with a top secret mission named Operation Failsafe. His mission was to create a time travel pocket watch called the designator, this watch was linked to four Die Glockes aka the time traveling machines also known as the Nazi bell, unknowingly Scott's true destiny was already mapped out even before he was born and the start of his destiny was to be driven insane at age 45 only to live breathe everything that was Adolf Hitler and the Nazis of World War two, during his insane moments he is designed to figure out where the Nazis went wrong, only to change the course of history when he returns to the past with the information he has learnt, but the mission takes several twists and turns when Scott decides to take tattooed schematics on his entire body of 1945 weapon's back to 1923 where he plans to meet Adolf Hitler, will he succeed or fail to find out more you will have to read the untold story of Scott Sutton.

Characters in story

Scott Joseph Sutton

The protagonist of the story. Born in 1965 to a modest but loving family, Scott always thought to be a normal person. In truth, he was a genetically engineered super weapon, the perfect Aryan soldier born to deliver the Third Reich to the Final Victory and World Domination. Thanks to the work of his uncle Hans, in reality SS-Obergruppenfuhrer and Doctor Hans Kammler; and doctor Josef Mengele of Auschwitz, Scott is genetically programmed to develop a brain tumor at the age of 50 which will make him obsess over the Third Reich and Adolf Hitler's National Socialism.

When he receives a mysterious package containing a beautiful painting, a strange watch and an enigmatic letter, Scott understands what his true destiny is, and History and the world will never be the same....

Adolf Hitler

The supreme Fuhrer of Nazi Germany and the NSDAP, and the most important figure in World War II. Born the 20th of April 1889 in the Austrian town of Braunau am Inn to an abusive father and a weak-willed albeit loving mother.

Trying to become an artist in Vienna in his young years, he had to struggle with poverty and witness the corruption of the Socialists and the intrigues of the Jews.

He fought valiantly in World War I, witnessing in first person what the war for Germany really meant for the Kaiser Wilhelm II and realizing what the destiny of the German Reich should really be.

First joining a little, obscure party known as DAP (Deutsche Arbeiterpartei – Party of the German Workers), he was astonished to find out the party was smaller than he thought: memberships were counted from the number 500 onwards as to appear a larger political party.

He quickly took control of the party, renaming it the NSDAP (Nationalsozialistische Deutsche Arbeiterpartei) and giving himself the title of Fuhrer.

After a failed coup in 1923 in Munich, aptly named the "Beer Hall Putsch", he got incarcerated alongside his henchmen in the Landsberg Prison and dictated his political testament, the Mein Kampf (My Struggle) to his closest friends Emil Maurice and Rudolf Hess.

He finally managed to seize the power in Germany in 1933, and in 1939 he started the Second World War, the war for Germany's future.

After quick victories in Poland and France, the defeats in England, Africa and the Soviet Union managed to bring Germany and the Nazi regime to ruin.

Everyone knows he killed himself in the Fuhrerbunker in Berlin alongside his wife Eva Braun shortly after having married her, but very few know he had a reserve plan for achieving Final Victory, codenamed Operation Failsafe....

Dr. Hans Kammler

Obergruppenfuhrer of the SS and German doctor chief of the Wunderwaffe (Wonder Weapons) project, he was also the scientific mastermind behind Scott's birth and Operation Failsafe.

He also collected the necessary knowledge and resources from Dr. Nikola Tesla in New York in 1943.

At the start of the plot, he is in hiding and known to Scott only as "Uncle Hans", but stays true to his mission and when the time is ripe, he sends Scott various parcels containing a medal, a beautiful painting and a mysterious watch, alongside a very surprising letter, which kickstarts the entire story and change History as we know it.

Dr. Josef Mengele

SS-Hauptsturmführer and chief medician at Auschwizt-Birkenau concentration camp, he is Scott's "scientific father" but not his biological one. His experiments were aimed to create fully human-reptilian hybrids. Scott is the only complete and functional hybrid. One failed experiment, Rowdy, is faithful to him and Scott and kept around as a pet. Canon History says he was a sadist whose experiments were pointless and only aimed to satisfy his morbidly curiosity, but there is a lot more about this man that no one knows...

Dr. Nikola Tesla

Croatian-born American scientist and a genius of his time, his main work was structured around electricity and space-temporal jumps. His knowledge is essential for Operation Failsafe, and he is reached by Hans Kammler at his room in the New Yorker Hotel on a fateful 7th of January 1943....

Dr. Albert Einstein

Jewish-born German scientific genius, is unprecedented talent for mathematics and physics earned him a Nobel Prize in 1921. Due to his jewish heritage and his hatred for the National Socialist regime, he is marked as an enemy, but his knowledge is fundamental for the creation of Hitler' Secret Weapon and the Wonderwaffe Program...

Heinrich Himmler

Fist Reichsführer of the SS, and Minister of the Interior.

Born a humble officer cadet and chicken farmer, as he progressed in the ranks of the SS and established it as the most efficient and terryfing force of the Nazi Party, and the main force driving the Final Solution.

He quickly strikes up friendship with Scott, but as the latter climbs up the ranks and gets closer to his position, fear and ambition get the better of him.

Mainstream History says he tried to betray Hitler in the last days of war and surrender to the Allies only to be ignored and commiting suicide.

But with Scott's interference, everything will be different for him.

Hermann Goering

Hero of the First World War and main ace of the Luftwaffe, he flew with the famed "Red Baron", Hauptmann Manfred Von Richtofen.

Canon historians depicts him as a lazy, edonistic and obese man. With Scott's arrival, Hermann manages to become again the daring ace and hero he was in his youth, and with new planes engineered by Scott he is able to lead his Luftwaffe in battle against Britain, changing the course of History.

Reinhard Heydrich

Head of the SD (Sicherheitdienst – Security service) and Obergruppenführer of the SS, he started his career as a young officer of the Kriegsmarine, only to be kicked out due to an affair with the daughter of a superior.

Joining the SS, he was tasked to create an intelligence system to investigate into the upper echelons of the German State and the Nazi Party itself. Called by Hitler himself the "man with the iron heart", he was intelligent, good-looking and ruthless, and quickly made his way in the ranks of the SS, from simple private to full General.

Among his initiatives were the "Salon Kitty" and the Night & Fog decree. In the canon timeline he was killed by British-trained Czech commandos in June 1942, but Scott's arrival changed his future as well as the world.

Léon Degrelle

Wallonian fascist, chief of the Rexism, he joined first the Wehrmacht and then the Waffen-SS in the early days of the War.

He quickly became to be regarded as a model soldier and Hitler himself said he was the son he always wanted.

With Scott's help, he's quick to show he is fully worthy of the trust placed upon him, by leading the German offensive in the Soviet Union and apprehending the Soviet leader Josef Stalin.

Professor Stephen Hawking

Scientific genius of our era and the entire human History, his discoveries in the fields of quantum mechanics and theoretical physics are astonishing and forwarded our scientific research by decades worthy of study. He suffers of a rare form of amyotrophic lateral sclerosis that nearly entirely paralyzes him.

When Scott begins to change History as we know it, Professor Hawking becomes his main enemy and a battle of wits between the two commences, on which outcome dangles the destiny of the world.

Cyril Sutton

Scott's father and a brave RAF officer, he is a man faithful to his motherland and of strong principles.

Scott's insistence to meet him in a concentration camp will lead to unforeseen consequences that will change the course of Scott's mission and History.

SS-Oberführer Dr. Joachim Marie Stucks

A young SS officer and Gestapo chief, he quickly becomes Scott's aide and trusted right-hand man, and also foils an attempt on his life.

As his position in the SS grows, so does his loyalty to the cause and Scott in particular.

Jonathan

One of Scott's friends, he is the most reliable and helps him through a lot of dangerous situations, risking for himself.

A really loyal and brave man, Scott soon learns he can count only on him and a few others in the direst times.

Thomas Lomax

One of Scott's friends, he's a laid back character and a joyful fellow, but he isn't the most reliable and trustworthy person in the times of peril.

Other minor characters

Rebecca Sutton, Scott's companion, she doesn't believe him at first, but when he changes History, so does her opinion.

New York City January 7th 1943

Famed inventor Nikola Tesla died on the 33rd floor room 27 in the New Yorker Hotel. Within hours of his body being discovered by maid Alice Monaghan, Tesla's nephew arrives at the hotel and is taken to room 3327, only to find his body as well that his uncle technical papers and note books have already been removed. The coroner, as well an hotel guest that is also a medic, diagnose the death is due heart failure. Speculation of the presents and the press is that the FBI had acquired his items and secretly designated them as top secret. They were wrong.

Before Nikola Tesla's supposed heart attack General SS-Obergruppenführer and Dr Ing. Hans Friedrich Karl Franz Kammler had travelled to the morning of January 7th 1943 in New York City, posing as a wealthy German businessman interested in investing large sums of money in Nikola Tesla wireless electricity.

During the meeting Nikola Tesla shows Hans how he envisioned a world with free electricity, electric cars, vertical thrust vehicles and pin point laser technology. Hans tells Tesla he is impressed with what he has told him, then hands him the first payment cheque of one million dollars to fund Nikola Tesla's wireless technology. Tesla places it in to his coat pocket, and Hans tells him that he needs to gather his papers and note books and get ready to travel to Germany within the hour as he has a plane already fuelled for the trip back to Germany. At first, Tesla has some doubts about the whole affair.

"Isn't a war ongoing in Germany?" he ask dubiously "I don't really want to be declared a traitor by the USA government". Hans is quick to reassure him "Don't worry, mr, Tesla. No one will know you have been i Germany, we will keep the secret safe. Also, if we succeed, there will be no more war and you will be hailed as an hero by both Germany and America". Tesla is visibly reassured and says "Then let me grab my items and I'll be ready to travel".

He then proceeds to reveal and unlock an hidden safe in the wardrobe. Once opened, he removes his papers from within the safe, and then Hans asks him: "With my funding, you have everything you need to complete your work, and I know you realize your work could end all wars and give the people the much needed free electricity. It's simply marvelous, dr. Tesla." to which Tesla replies "Yes, effectively here we have my life's work all down on paper, and exposed in a way that even a child could comprehend it!"

With a sudden move Hans places his left arm around Tesla's shoulder using the hand to hold his nose and his mouth shut, he then delivers a powerful blow to the chest using his right hand.

Eyes widened, Tesla falls to his knees succumbing to the induced fatal heart attack, Hans still holding his mouth shut as he falls face down on the floor.

Hans proceeds to put Tesla in a fetal position to make it look like he has died in his sleep, Hans gathers Tesla's paper work he places them in his breath case. He then gently removes the cheque from Tesla's pocket only to find another note book in the same pocket as the cheque. Intrigued, Hans starts frisking Tesla's body and finds more paper work hidden in the waist band and inner coat pockets along with a safe deposit key with a label on for Seamen's Bank for Savings, 74 Wall St., New York City key number 369.

He proceeds to place everything in the breath case as well, then discreetly exits the room and quietly leaves the hotel. On his way out he stops by the bell boy: "Please, do send someone to check on my friend, dr. Nikola Tesla, in his room. He wasn't very well during our meeting and sent me on my way, while lamenting chest pains." "I understand, sir" replies the bell boy "I will send a maid to check immediately." "Do it quickly" replies Hans doing his best to sound worried " I am really worried and I'm starting to think he's going to need medical treatment". He then proceeds to hand ten dollars to the bell boy and make his leave.

When the maid sent by the bell boy arrives at room 3327, she tries the door and finds it unlocked, she then excuses herself and walks in only to find Nikola Tesla already deceased laying on his bed. She then proceeds to call for help, and a passing guest who is also a doctor intervenes and confirms the scientist's death. The police is called and when it arrives, FBI agents in gray three pieces suits are with them. They frisks and search the whole room to no avail: Tesla's lifetime work is gone.

Now Hans has over 700 patterned inventions of Nikola Tesla along with the secret Tesla coils technology as well as the scientist's safe deposit key.

When Hans' taxi arrives at Seamen's Bank for Savings, 74 Wall St, he pays his fair and tells the driver that there is another 100 dollars in it for him if he waits. Hans then gets out of the taxi and walks into the bank.

He goes up to the reception desk and asks to see the bank manager to which the manager arrives, shakes Hans' hand and bring into his office to talk business.

After a cursory drink, Hans says to him: " I have the key and verbal permission to retrieve the belongings of Nikola Tesla safe deposit box number 369 " the manager hums a little and replies " I'm sorry, but I would also need to have Nikola Tesla signature along with his password (which is "talking with planets") on one of our forms before I can even take you down to the deposit vault "

Hans then relaxes on his chair and replies " Well, then we have a little issue: Nikola Tesla has deceased this afternoon from a heart attack "the manager frowns for a moment, then replies " Well if you would be able to get me his death certificate along with the approval of his next of kin then I'm sure that would be just fine "

Having reached the limits of his patience, Hans puts his hand into his breath case, he pulls out a black ivory-plated Luger, cocks it and points it at the manager's head and says with cold voice: " Well, I'm afraid I have to insist you to take to the vault and allow me to open the safe deposit box 369. Trust me, another refusal will be the last thing you will ever say" the manager pales but manages to blurt " In that case let me take you down to the vault ". They then get up and Hans coolly says "Schon, now don't be an idiot, play nice with me and I will play nice with you, ja?" "I understand, sir."

The two men walk down the stairs to the vault where the safe deposit box is held.

Hans orders the manager to open the vault to which he complies, they walk into the vault and the man shows Hans the safe deposit box. Hans places the key into the box and unlocks it, he then tells the manager to get on his knees, he walks behind him as the man is saying " Please sir, don't kill me I have a family " Hans cracks him with the gun on the back of his head with such brutality to knock him unconscious, making him slumping to the floor, with blood pouring out of the open wound leaving a puddle getting larger and larger as his body pumps the blood around his body and out of the wound. After one minute, the blood starts to get from red to black, irreversibly staining the white pealy pavement.

Hans opens the box only to find a book which is hand written by Nikola Tesla himself, entitled

"My Mind's Eye". The book reveals the inside of the working mind of Nikola Tesla as without this book none of Tesla's inventions could have been built, or even been conceivable.

The document is filled in the gaps to create all Nikola Tesla's inventions.

For Hans, this the Holy Grail. He places the book into his breath case, he removes the vault keys from the manager's waist and he pulls the gates shut, he locks them behind him then he walks up the stairs and out of the building then into his waiting taxi, he travels to the LGA Airport. He then pays the agreed money to the taxi driver and hands him 50 dollars more and says "You have never seen me, understood?" to which the man replies "Seen what?".

Hans personal airplane, disguised as military civil recon, is fuelled and waiting to take him back to Germany.

In the time between February 1943 and April 1954, SS-Obergruppenführer Hans Kammler oversaw hundreds of shell oil companies all around the world.

These facilities were run by the SS alongside the Vril Society, and built hundreds of Tesla receiving stations purposely made to look like ordinary oil rigs facilities. Those stations have been built specifically in particular nodal points on Earth, to allow electricity to jump wirelessly from station to station.

The station themselves have been built with four specifically designed Tesla Coil dishes placed around the base. Once powered up those bases resonated electro-plasma around the whole tower, placing them in a fazed state out of synchronization and invisible in our timeline and dimension.

Those towers were to be used to permanently keep powered every type of Nazi Wonder Waffe and devices, like the Die Glockes (also known as Nazi Bells).

Once each station has been placed out of our timeline's faze, the respective front company would be dissolved or run at loss.

This was the modus operandi for every company until every receiving station was completed, with the final one being ultimated on 30th March 1945.

After Adolf Hitler seized power in Germany on January 30 1933 Albert Einstein decides to cut all contacts to German institutions with which he had worked. On March 28 he declared he was leaving the Prussian Academy of Sciences but before he could leave for America, he was arrested by the Gestapo and imprisoned, and forced to work on top secret weapon projects for the Third Reich under the watchful eye of SS-Obergruppenführer Hans Kammler.

April 1945 nearing the end of the war

In the Owl Mountains, inside an underground complex of tunnels and facilities called "Der Riese", the Giant, located beneath Furstenstein Castle, Hans Kammler is overseeing the build of the Die Glocke Designator Pocket Watch version 4. The three previous designators where catastrophic failures. They practically burnt the test subjects alive as soon as the power button was pressed. This resulted in the grotesque and gory death of many men.

Most of these men were kidnapped German watch makers who had worked at the Hanhart Chronographen before and after the War, while some came from the Stuttgart Uhrhandelmesse Werke.

These workers were forced to build the watches, with their effort coadiuvated by physicist

Albert Einstein, who was using Nikola Tesla's notes to build power coil and relays along with the radiation buffering coil systems for the Die Glockes.

For the past two years Physicist Albert Einstein has been forced to work with the SS Office IX, the Technische Ausrüstung und Maschinen Amt, the technical and machine department.

The Vril Society, alongside the office, used Einstein's own design for the nuclear power core but it was way too unstable and in an early, prototypal state.

By using Nikola Tesla's notes, Einstein had finally been able to build the power core by using the serbian mastermind's technical data. He miniaturised a power receiving station, powered by miniature high voltage Tesla Coils that draw power from the network of Tesla receiving stations around the world.

These coils were run by the very first android computer made from reverse engineered parts from an unknown and mysterious space ship that landed in Nurtemberg, Germany in 1936.

Only three Die Glockes had them built in their interphase, the fourth one had a Jewish infant child's brain as a "live" intelligence interface instead of an android computer. This was made possible by Doktor and SS-Hauptsturmführer Josef Mengele research done in Auschwitz Konzentrationlager.

Hans knows there's very little time left, and orders the watch makers to hurry up or he will have them shot. SS men in gray uniforms patrol the workshops with MP-40s in their arms while yelling things such as "Also los, Bewegung!!", "Schnellen ja! Machen sie auch schneller!"

Albert Einstein, his brow madid with sweat replies " They cannot hurry, without my radiation coil system everything will fail as if my calculations are wrong even under the 1%, the resulting worm hole will engulf the user within radiation feedback loops which will destory him and the watch as before.

You need these Die Glockes and the watch to be the most accurate possible or it will fail again ."

Unfazed, Hans replies: " It'd better work this time as you are testing it personally, dr. Einstein. I've lost three good Aryan SS Officers who were my personal friends, and they were too much for my tastes. I am not going to lose another." he takes a deep breath, then calls over his assistant, a balding SS-Sturmbannführer (Major) in black uniform wearing a monocle "Sturmbannführer Lindstrom, keep an eye on him for now. If he does anything stupid, shoot him." "Jawohl, Herr General" replies Lindstrom unholstering his black Walther P38.

Just then one German watch maker jumps up and shouts: "Herr General, I think we've done it this time! I have used Nikola Tesla's notes to create it but we do need to install these radiation buffering coil systems that Albert Einstein is building in the four Die Glockes first to be really ready for testing the watch – with this, it should be fully functional."

The radiation feedback loops coil systems are of a relatively simple but ingenious design, they were made from two inch thick copper piping with the diameter of eight inches; these pipes were in a circle and their circumference was forty feet around, inside the pipe are hundreds of circular magnets each one facing the same pole north to north, south to south and around the outer circular piping was copper wire completely rapped around like a coil. Inside the Die Glocke there were two of these copper coils: one as the North Pole and one as the South Pole. When they power up the magnets inside spin and push each other forcing them to spin around inside the pipe: the more power the faster the magnets spins. This simple design allows the Die Glocke's to keep the wormhole stable.

Later that day Hans oversees the radiation feedback coil systems fitting into the four Die Glockes which were launched into space from The Henge, which is a complex ring of stones similar to Stonehenge in England, as both were built by ancient and mysterious civilizations. Before the launch the Die Glockes had a thin material placed over the outer shells. There had been just enough material for all four Die Glockes ; when powered up this material forges itself together, creating one total skin that covers the outer shell, this material when forged together creates a light reflective surface, also each Die Glocke is set with a different set of rotating mystic key coded runes which are around the base of the Die Glockes. These items when activated shields the Glocke from the enemy and future man made machines giving them the power to stay hidden.

Since Einstein's usefulness it's over and his hatred for the Nazi regime, Hans is not a fool and ties him up to a metal chair bolted to the pavement. He sets the watch for five hours in the past using the same coordinates of the Der Riese facility , he pins the watch to Albert Einstein's chest and presses the power button and steps back. Lindstrom, the other SS soldiers and the workers watch without saying a word.

Just then Albert Einstein screams in agony as the symbol on the back of the watch depicting the Schwarze Sonne(the black sun) attaches itself to him, each ray is an electrode, each electrode pierces his skin as it melts his flesh as the watch becomes part of him, just then a blinding white light emanates from the watch encircling the doctor, and blinding everyone else.

As the light dissipates Albert Einstein and the chair have disappeared.

Five hours back in time Albert Einstein appears within the white light intact still tied to the chair, as the German watch maker states he's finished his work on the watch and that it is fully functional, he looks up , he is temporarily blinded by the light.

As the light dissipates his vision becomes clear, only to see himself tied to a chair with the watch attached to his chest , the same watch the watch maker is holding in his hand, now the watch maker knows it was a success as Albert Einstein is also sitting at the work bench next to him.

Horrified Albert Einstein is restrained by Sturmbannfuhrer Lindstrom and another SS soldier as he watches on while Hans tries to remove the watch that is attached to the version of himself tied to the chair but the watch can't be removed as it has become part of his flesh, then Hans removes his SS Honor Dagger; he cuts two words in Albert Einstein's chest, then Hans unclips his holster he removes his custom white plated Luger , then places the gun towards Albert Einstein's head who is tied to the chair, as Hans points it at his head, he hears the other Albert Einstein who is being restrained at the bench alongside the watch maker. He's screaming: "No no please, my god no, you need me!!! Please don't do this!!!" Hans ignores his plea as he shoots him through the head. Albert Einstein watches as a bullet pass through his future self's head and his brain matter splats alongside blood and gore all over the wall behind himself. With tears streaming down his face as now he knows his fate is sealed, then he watches his future self-disappear within a blinding white light as the watch takes him back from when he came. Now back 5 hours in the future the white light appears then dissipates Hans see Albert Einstein still tied up to the chair but with his brains blown out and the words " Es werk" ("It works") cut into his chest, Hans smells the burnt flesh of the powder burn on the mussel of his gun.

He says:"Excellent, now that's what you call a success." Hans uses his dagger to cut the watch out from Albert Einstein chest picking out the flesh from the electrodes so the symbol of the black sun is reformed its natural shape.

Knowing his work is done Hans Kammler calls Adolf Hitler in the Fuhrerbunker, he tells him that operation Fail Safe test was a 100% successful.

He asks: "What are your orders now, Mein Fuhrer?" "Proceed immediately" replies Hitler with voice trembling with emotion "Gott ist mit uns!! We can't be defeated now. Operation Failsafe is a go. Sieg Heil!"

Later that night, der Reichsfuhrer-SS Heinrich Himmler arrives to check Hans' progresses.

"For your success" he says in a speech to the SS troops and officers of the Der Riese facility "you are all getting promotion and are awarded with NSDAP Golden Badge." The crowd explodes in a volley of jubilation and Heil Hitlers.

As Kammler, Himmler, Lindstrom and the other officers make a toast to their success with 1st class quality Champagne; the soldiers starts partying and drinking beer while singing songs such as "Erika" and "SS Marschiert in Feindesland".

The morning after, the workers are brought out in the woods and shot.

After all the witnesses are disposed of, and the loyal SS troops are rewarded, Hans returns in the laboratory. In the meantime, Himmler oversees that Lindstrom and the other SS soldiers get the last german and jewish scientists locked in the Der Riese inner chambers.

Hans pick up the modified refrigeration back pack, removes some test tubes and vials from a cooler and all the paperwork relating to Operation Fail Safe. He places everything in his backpack, then orders that the surviving workers and scientists locked in the complex are to be buried alive by blowing up the only entrance.

Hans now stands on a deserted hill, the watch in hand and wearing the backpack.

Himmler, Lindstrom and the other officers watch him. "Good luck, Hans" says Himmler "in your mission rests the fate of the Third Reich" "I know, Reichsfuhrer" replies Hans with determined voice "I will not fail. Heil Hitler!" . Himmler and the officers salute him , and he presses the button.

The watch starts to glow white and feel hot, starts to melt his flesh and attach itself to his hand. He then gets engulfed in white light, blinding Himmler and the SS officers. When the light vanishes and they can see again, Hans is gone. He is now traveling to a mysterious destination in Cambridge, England.

Today, April 20th 2012

Picture a battlefield engulfed in a bloody and savage firefight. Elite Waffen-SS soldiers to the left, soldiers of the 11th British Corps to the right.

A German SS Marschall is standing atop the battlefield. He is an SS Oberst-Gruppenfuhrer wearing a grey, closed collar uniform festoned with medals, and his name is Scott Sutton. He gives orders to the Panzer Divion I, his troops have to take the English stronghold at all costs. They are the only ones who can accomplish this mission: the Wehrmacht has withdrawn it's support due to Generaloberst Heinz Guderian's orders. He thinks the mission is impossible, but Scott intend to prove him wrong.

Scott gives the orders to his assistant, an SS-Obersturmbannfuhrer "Obersturmbannfuhrer Riedman, make the big of our troops advance. The only prisoner we need is Lieutenant General Robert Noden. Kill everyone else, keep only him alive." "Jawohl, Herr Oberst-Gruppenfuhrer!" replies Riedman., and relays the orders to the lower officers.

The battle goes on, and the German's centre colum falls back and shouts retreat, much to the English' surprise. They waste no time taking the bait, charging into what they think it's the weak link, and soon they are encircled and massacred. It was a trap, and very few English soldiers survive the onslaught. After the bloodbath, the SS soldiers prevail and starts to execute every prisoner, while Lieutenant General Robert Noden is marched to Scott at gunpoint.

As the two men meet, they shake their hands. "Jolly good show, old chap" compliments General Noden "same time next month?" " You bet it" replies SS Marschall and Oberst-Gruppenfuhrer Scott "but next time it's your turn to win. Now let's go to relax and drink some beer!".

Then all the dead English and German troops get up and clean themselves of the dirt. It was all been a WW-II re-enactment.

Monday April 23rd 2012

Monday April 23rd, 9am.

Scott is at Addenbrookes hospital, receiving the results of his blood test and his MIR scan. The doctor tells Scott that his Pituitary gland has switched off the production of testosterone and that he will require an injection of hormone replacement every two weeks by his doctors. The doctor explains: "It will be needed a follow-up in one year's time doing more blood tests to make sure you is getting the correct amount of the hormone replacement. Any question, mr. Sutton?" "No, it's all clear, thank you doctor" replies Scott, and is now free to go home.

Scott is an IT specialist at Cambridge Computer Supplies High Street, Chesterton, Cambridge.

He is on an annual salary of £24,000 and lives in Chesterton with his partner Rebecca and four of his kid's children.

One clouded, rainy day Scott receives a large parcel from his uncle Hans in Germany.

Little he knows this is the day where the truth about his True Destiny will unfold.

In the parcel there is a letter, a large and majestic oil painting in which Scott is depicted in black SS uniform receiving a medal from Adolf Hitler and three diagrams: one is of a medal called "Sieg Uber England" (Victory over England) and the other two are of a pocket watch called The Designator.

Intrigued by those items, Scott reads the letter.

Here folloes the letter's content:

Dear Scott,

All of your life you have known me as your uncle Hans.

But the truth is another, a truth you may find hard to accept, but the truth nonetheless.

I've been watching over you since your birth in March, 1965. My full name and title is SS-Obergruppenfuhrer und Generalleutnant der Waffen-SS Dr Hans Friedrich Karl Franz Kammler.

Along with this letter, I have sent you a large 3ft x 5ft original oil painting, created in 1942.

In this wonderful artwork you are depicted receiving a medal known as the Victory over England "Sieg uber England" Auszeichnung in Gold, manufactured by Dreschler und Sohn of Munchen.

However, this event has not happened in your lifetime as yet, I will explain to you all about the painting soon but first and foremost I must explain you the current state of affairs. The History as you know it tells of a Germany beaten by the Allied Coalition but our sum leader, Der Fuhrer Adolf Hitler had one last plan to see his Thousand Year Reich come to fruition, a plan that was instigated in the 1933 and implemented in April 1945.

History also tells of the infamous concentration camp called Auschwitz. Created by SS-Obergruppenfuhrer Theodor Eicke under der Fuhrer's orders, this necessary evil was not a 'death camp' at all, it was in fact a laboratory complex built for my dear friend SS-Hauptsturmfuhrer and Doktor Josef Mengele whose work required live, human test subjects, of which the camp offered an endless supply, to use as guinea pigs. Mengele was developing a serum which, when injected into the body causes a tumour-like cell to grow on the cerebrum and frontal lobe. The tumour causes a tenfold increase in brain capacity, rendering feats such as learning a language in a day or memorizing complex mathematical algorithms possible. Also, at the same time Dr Mengele was creating the first test-tube 'younglings' as he called them, in vitro babies you and I call them.

He altered their blood chemistry and composition using blood extracted from reptiles such as crocodiles; this would allow the younglings to heal a broken limb within a day or so, maintaining continued use but without feeling any pain. The amount of plasma in the blood was over three times more than normal; creating vast quantities of hemoglobin's to aid the healing process. The first test-tube younglings created in the Lebensborn program were abominations with scaly skin, appearing more reptilian than humanoid; with no real intelligence and a a feral bloodlust. God knows how many researchers we have lost to these beasts. Because of their characteristics, we called them "Troglodytes". Those failed test subjects were all disposed of except for one that Mengele kept as a pet knick named Rowdy because he was so noisy, but also not feral and very reliable and faithful. The initial problems encountered were eventually overcome by trial and error and when Dr Mengele successfully produced his first full human hybrid test-tube youngling, we waited for our orders. For these feats, he was awarded with lots of medals and gold, and a promotion to SS-Obersturmbannfuhrer, which he wished to kept secret.

Until the end of April 1945 I oversaw the production of four Die Glocke time machines and also a gold watch called The Designator. Each Die Glocke is mystically cloaked using a different set of rotating key-coded runes which are depicted around the base of the machines and around the rim of the watch outer-casing, providing a shield against any hostile, future man-made machines. Also, each Die Glocke has an outer shell that can bend light this also makes it hard to detect, making it invisible to the naked eye. On the rear of the watch is a symbol called the Schwarze Sonne, the Black Sun. And each Die Glocke is linked to the Designator. Upon setting time, date and co-ordinates on the watch dial, to the required destination and then pressing the power button, you will feel a pain like nothing you have felt before but this will only happen once as the watch will become part of you and merge with your flesh. Do not be afraid, as I know you have always been a very tenacious person, and as kid you never cried when you got hurt while playing.

The Black Sun's rays will glow white hot, shooting forth from the watch-case, each electrode attaching itself to your body, melting your flesh as the Designator becomes a part of you. At this moment, a blinding light will engulf you and the nearest Die Glocke will open a portal in the fourth dimension, creating two wormholes in the same space but in different time zones, allowing you to travel through space and time, a quantum leap so to speak. With the Designator attached to you, you can control when and where you want to travel to past or future.

We also installed within the Die Glockes a radiation buffering coil system to stop a possible radiation feedback loop; this will keep the wormhole stable, and prevent a massive nuclear reaction.

Once you have played your part in the grand scheme, the past history of the Twentieth Century will change for the greater good of the Thousand Year Reich.

One of the four Die Glockes landed in Kerksburg, Pennsylvania late in the year of your birth, 1965. There are only three left in use. The Americans haven't discovered their true purpose although they have machine Nummer Vier. The Americans were led to believe that the Germans were developing a sort of 'vertical lift', so that's how they have come to see it.

Getting back to the watch, once it attaches itself to your flesh it uses your brain's electrical impulses to keep you in the time era you have set. You will stay in that time unless, by chance you have been rendered unconscious, should this happen, the watch will take you back from whence you came. Don't worry, this will not happen if you fall asleep, only if you get rendered unconscious against your will.

If the watch takes you back the dials will always show the last time, date and coordinates of where you were just in case they are needed.

The time machines were made for the Youngling to be born shortly after the Second World War, you were born in 1965 and as you probably have already guessed, you are the first and only full human hybrid Youngling. I know, this sudden knowledge may get you in disarray, but I plead you to keep a clear mind for your mission.

Now you are in your mid-forties the doctors at the hospital will have told you your pituitary gland had switched off, so now you need to have testosterone injected every fourteen days at your doctor's study.

The nurse who injects you is switching the hormone for the serum made by Dr Mengele. The serum injection will cause a tumour to grow and cover your cerebrum and your frontal lobe, just as I explained to you earlier.

This will forcefully change your personality, pushing you to the brink of insanity, living out everything that was and still is Der Fuhrer, Adolf Hitler. But this change will also help you to alter the outcome of the war for Germany, making them the victors and conquerors of the world. I'm afraid this will be the only way, and you will have to face much physical and psychological. But, I know you are a man of temper and steel, and you will overcome this.

Don't worry about the tumour when your doctors will discover it, as it won't kill you as your doctor's will fear, you are a full human hybrid and your blood chemistry has been reconfigured.

Your condition would certainly be terminal if you were a normal inferior human. When we tested the serum in Auschwitz on inferior untermenschen jew subjects they died an agonizing, terrible death, but it was fun to watch as the light faded from their eyes.

Before I had the watch removed from my hand, I travelled to your future and stole the painting from the War Museum in Berlin, along with the designs for the Victory Medal and the pocket watch, to show you your true destiny. Sadly, when the surgeon removed the watch from my hand, the device's power source was damaged and in the process my hand was crippled.

My disability is not your concern though; it's the power source that needs to be repaired and the only men who knew how to do this I buried alive in a mountain in Poland to cover up the secrets regarding you and your true destiny.

None of what I have told you will ever be possible unless you find an alternative power source to activate the watch. I have total faith in your ability, you will certainly find a new and viable power source, otherwise the painting would not exist in your future for me to steal. Scott, don't worry about finding the Designator, I have it myself and will send it to you when the time is ready.

30th April 1945, Adolf and Eva Braun, faked their deaths and fled to a farm in Argentina where they later had two daughters.

Der Fuhrer's last order to me was to proceed with Operation Failsafe. I, Hans Kammler was never to be seen again and I was never hunted down for war crimes.

I was only ever mentioned once at the Nuremburg War Trials, or so I'm led to believe. It was as if I had disappeared without trace. Some even thought of me as dead.

I used the Designator at the end April 1945 on the mountainside in Poland where I had buried the scientists alive, who worked on the Die Glockes and watchmakers. I left with you and the serum in a modified, refrigerated back-pack to a secret destination in Cambridge England late in 1963 where I met up with the Guardians of the Black Sun, also known as Vrill society in a meeting hall somewhere in Cambridge.

There I was presented with a true Aryan female, who was later to become your mother. The Black Sun design on the watch is a secret symbolic representation of you, which you will find out all in good time.

You have been entrusted for Operation Failsafe, let no one stand in the way of your true destiny, the Thousand Year Reich.

Heil Hitler.

Uncle Hans.

SS-Obergruppenfuhrer und Generalleutnant der Waffen-SS Dr Hans Friedrich Karl Franz. Kammler. "

P.S. : Once you have read this letter, destroy it as it's for your eyes only.

When Scott finishes reading, his hands are trembling.

This all seems impossible, yet he understands that is the Truth. The painting, medal and other schemes are too real to be some kind of joke from his uncle.

Scott now knows this is his true destiny, and hows the letter to his partner Rebecca.

She is baffled, and says: "You are joking, this a joke set up by that old mad man, you should know better!" unfazed, Scott replies: "Just wait and see. When the watch will arrive, you will see that this is the Truth." " You are both mad!" shrugs her.

Friday 27 April 2012 another small parcel turns up. It's the watch that Hans promised Scott.

Now Scott is sure that everything is true,

But the watch is broken and non-functional, pre-set for end of April 1945. Coordinates:

Ministergarten, centre of Berlin.

Scott tinkers with the watch but he has no luck repairing it.

Since England has been in the EU migrant workers have been flooding in England to make a better lives for themselves.

Sam Omar, the owner of Cambridge Computer Supplies decides he can only afford Scott on half pay at 20 hours per week instead of 40! This puts a strain on Scott's home-life as they struggle to make ends meet.

Due to this, Scott starts to show signs of deep depression, and he seems to get more and more engrossed in the history of Germany in World War II and the dark side of the torture and killings of the enemies of the Third Reich.

He turns up early to work on a Monday only to find out a polish migrant worker is doing the other 20 hours a week he has currently been cut! His judgment clouded by rightful anger, Scott lashes to the Polish man and a fight ensues, Scott is told to leave and don't come back until he can apologise!

His mind boggling, Scott goes straight to his eldest daughter, Samantha Sutton, shouting racist remarks and obscenities. The stress of the situation is taking its toll on him.

Sam calms him down and Scott asks Sam's boyfriend Mark Harris to come around and tattoo Nazi symbols on his body that Scott himself has designed.

It's now Wednesday 2nd May, the day of the ceasefire between German and Allied troops.

Scott gets up and heads to work to apologize. When he arrives at work, Sam notices Scott's tattoo's, Scott gets called into the office where Sam then tells Scott that due to this, he has to drop him. Angered, Scott throws a large tantrum. Police is called and Scott gets arrested but no charges are made and Scott is free to go home later that night.

Scott finally reaches his home, only to find his partner Rebecca is packing, as she's leaving him. Confused and heartbroken, Scott asks: "What's going on, what are you doing?" to which Rebecca replies "You now have no job, you got arrested, you have spent all our savings on Adolf Hitler and Nazi shit. Scott, do you realize that we couldn't afford the rent and other bills, they have spiralled out of control and we have an eviction order. An eviction order! And all you seem to care about is WW2 re-enactment or Adolf Hitler! You don't seem to care about me and the kids anymore. You are not the same anymore, you have become sinister and frightening at times." she sighs " I am worried for your health and I love you, but I also have to think about my children and my interests."

Scott is left speechless and says nothing. Rebecca leaves with the kid's.

After his eviction order is served, the Town Council re-house Scott into an old non-modernised house with dangerous electrics and very bad plumbing.

Scott's depression is so bad now he only talks about Adolf Hitler, the Third Reich and how they should have won the war, as if they had won, this country would have been a better place to live.

Rebecca gets a part time job to make ends meet while living with her mother. Scott is unemployable in his current state.

As Rebecca leaves early for work, she calls around Scott's and she knocks his door.

Shuffling, Scott opens the door, Rebecca walks in and says : "This place is a shit hole not fit for rats, look at this place! If you want me and the kids back you have to fix this place up starting with the electrics and plumbing. And that's if you are somewhat capable to pull yourself away from that shit you're so indulged in and put that fucking watch down. And listen to me when I'm talking to you!" Scott ignores Rebecca as she continues to rant and rave at him, Rebecca says "Forget it" and leaves for work.

After a while of being on his own he manages to pull himself together, picks up a screwdriver and step ladder and tries to fix the strip light in the kitchen. Whilst working on the light the step ladder moves and the screw driver slips Scott is electrocuted, but it's unlike a normal electric shock: it's a tingle that runs through his whole body, as if he was like a conductor, Just then The pocket watch in his top pocket glows white hot burning a hole in his shirt then melting his flesh as the electrode becoming part of him, Scott think he is having a heart attack with the pain in his chest when he see the blinding white light , the pain subsides and the white light fades he is partly blinded by the light, he can hear bullets ricochet. As this happens, he realizes that Uncle Hans told him the truth, and it wasn't a joke.

Scott is amazed as he finds himself transported in a middle of a fire fight in the streets of the Ministergarten in Berlin in April 1945 at the end of the war, the Hitlerjugend (Hitler Youth) and the Volkssturm alongside a lone Wehrmacht officer holding their own against Russian veteran troops. Bullets are flying everywhere.

Trying to not get himself killed, Scott runs to seek cover but is shot clean through his right four arm which spins him round and knocks him to the ground; he manages to pick himself up and find cover. A young Hitlerjugend boy sees Scott run into a corner of a building, and mistaking him for a enemy, he throws a hand grenade behind Scott's position. Scott sees this and runs as fast as he can back into the hail of bullets, but the shockwave of the blast knocks Scott unconscious and the watch returns him from whence he came, engulfing him in white light. The Germans and Soviets not noticing, mistaking it as an artillery shell explosion. Also, Scott brought most of the blast back with him within the white light smashing him into the kitchen cupboards, breaking them up as he falls to the floor unconscious. The kitchen now looks like a battle field.

On her way home from work Rebecca decides to drop in on Scott she finds him knocked out cold in the wrecked kitchen. Alarmed and very worried for his health,, she calls for an ambulance, when the ambulance arrives they refuse to go in until the police have checked out the premises, thinking it could be worse of a simple incident. Rebecca fears it might be an attempted suicide, and the paramedics agree.

The police establish that the reason was Scott tinkering with pyrotechnics from his re-enactment that went off by mistake and he is taken to hospital.

Whilst at the hospital, Rebecca seeks out the doctor to find out what's going on and requests Scott sees a psychiatrist. Rebecca asks for help because Scott's obsession is getting out of hand and she thinks he tried to kill himself, as she knows he's depressed but not knowing what really happened. The doctor request X-rays and an MRI scan to see if Scott has got any serious damage during the explosion. The X-rays shows one broken bone where the bullet went clean through Scott's arm and the MRI results show Scott has a brain tumour its unlike anything the doctors have seen before and they have no explanation on how Scott is still alive with a tumour this size.

Scott finally comes to senses, the doctor goes to Scotts bedside to give him the bad news. Scott doesn't seem to care about anything other than trying to tell the doctor he was just in Berlin in 1945, and if he could go back again he would devise a way of meet Adolf Hitler, without being killed as an English spy, and try to change the course of England, Germany and the world's history. "I am serious, doc" he proclaims with a resolved stare.

The doctor is worried and says "It wasn't real Scott This is your brains way of coping with the tumour. We fear that those delusions may get worse," Scott tells the doc "You don't understand, no-one understands, only I have this opportunity and I'm not going waste it. I will re-create the accident even if it kills me. I got to try, I HAVE to, anything would be better than this shit country we live in now, a disgusting immigration cesspit". The doctor is baffled, but says nothing.

Scotts arm get put in plaster and doctors request blood tests and a biopsy of the tumour. Scott allows the blood to be prelevated but refuse to the biopsy.

Scott discharges himself from the medical care, dresses up and goes home.

He finds a letter from Rebecca stating that due to his current situation, he is to be deemed a danger to their kids and he can't see them for the time being. She also reccomends for him to help for the little time he has left. Initially a bit shaken by this, Scott quickly overcomes this emotions, as he rationalizes that if he is correct in what is happening, the future of the world and his own will be changed for the better.

Scott cuts off the cast from his arm, discovering that it has nearly healed, so he decides the only way to meet and gain Adolf Hitler's trust is to befriend him before his rise to power. Scott then devises a plan to get Hitler think he saved him from bullets during the Putsch March on 8th Novemeber 1923.

Scott replaces the fuse wire for the downstairs room's lights, sets the Designator for 20th January 1923 outside Bürgerbräukeller Beer Hall in Munich , picks up the burnt screwdriver and crosses the two wires as before.

As predicted, the watch glows white hot and a white light soon engulfs him.

Overcoming the pain, Scott finds himself in Munich outside the beer hall.

To sustain himself for the time being, Scott finds a labouring job and stays in Munich for most of that year.

He sits at the back of the beer hall every time Adolf Hitler makes a speech, Scott made sure he was there at the back of the hall to oversee that everything went well.

If someone from the opposition or a troublemaker threw a bottle or made Hitler look a fool Scott would get violent and hit them with his trusty Billy club until they passed out.

Hitler seems to not notice him, but Scott does not lose his confidence. He will get in the Fuhrer's inner circle, no matter the costs.

But one night late in October, everything changes.

A man keeps heckling Hitler during his speech, and SA brownshirts do not seem to take any action. Scott loses total control and hits him very hard in the mouth with his Billy club.

He hits him so hard that the man's teeth flies across the table, then he jumps him and starts beating the ever living out of him. Blood, mucus and tears are getting out of the man's head, as he cries and begs for mercy. Scott does not listen to him, and brutally lodges his Billy club in the man's eye socket, popping out the eyeball in what is literally a shower of blood. Hitler stops speaching, and alongside the audience starts to watch the beating with amazed expression. Not satisfied, Scott drags the mn while he's bleeding and screaming for mercy outside the hall and in the dark streets. He decides it's time to try out his new, shiny leather jackboots, and start stomping the man's head. With every hit, the skull crack open and the other eye pops out the socket, splurting blood and gray matter all over his boots and black trousers. Scott hears a police whistle in the cold of the night, and makes his leave as the clacking of the police's boots gets closer.

The following evening, as Scott enters the beer hall a SA brown shirt accosts him and informs him that Adolf Hitler has noticed him and would like "a little chat".As he enters Hitler's room, Scott notices the Fuhrer himself, his gaze staring out of the window in the distance.

"Your little display last night has attracted the attention of many of my supporters, and myself" says Hitler while turning to Scott " I appreciated it. It showed everyone to not mess with us." " I just did what I felt it was right – he was making you ridicolous, and I couldn't stand that." replies Scott with deferent tone. Hitler quietly nods and says " You seem to be a very capable and loyal man, and that's what I look for in my lieutenants. What's your name?" "My name is Scott Sutton, and I am a english migrant in Germany." Hitler seems a little surprised for what Scott has said, then nods again.

" My nationality is a problem?" says Scott a little worried. Hitler shakes his head a little "Not at all. The English are a proud people, and I admire them. Besides, you actions of last night demonstrated that you are more German in the facts than some of the "men" around here." Scott is moved by Hitler's words but says nothing. Hitler looks at him with trusting eyes, and says " Say, Scott. The time of words has ended, and the time of action has come. We are going to act on the 8th of the next month, and we will start our crusade to free Germany from the Jews and democratic's claws. Would you be one of us, and watch my back?" " It would an honor, mein Fuhrer" replies Scott. "Good" nods Hitler "I wish that more of my men would be like you."

In the following hours, Scott is given a SA uniform and gets the rank of SA-Fuhrer. He also makes the acquaintance Heinrich Himmler and Julius Schreck, and quickly strikes up friendship with them. The young Himmler confides Scott " One day, we will fund an army worthy of the Fuhrer, an army that will earn the praise of our allies and the fear of our enemies." Scott nods with approval: he knows that Himmler is speaking of the SS.

The days go on, and the fatidic day of the Putsch arrives.

Through a serious of clumsy manoeuvres, the Nazis took over the Bürgerbräukeller Beer Hall in Munich and detained some of the Bavarian government leaders on the evening on 8 November 1923.

The putsch attempt almost fell apart during that night. On the following day Hitler and the Nazi leadership, determined to seize the initiative by marching on downtown Munich, with the intention to take over the Bavarian War Ministry.

It was a dull and cold day, and around 2000 Nazis marched to the town square to rally citizens to join their cause and north toward the War Ministry building on Ludwigstraße on 9 November 1923. During the march Scott made sure he was directly behind Adolf Hitler, guarding not only his back, but also his left and right.

The nationalsocialists crusaders approached a bridge over the Isar river they come upon a small Bavarian police barrier but they brushed them aside and the police let them through. Halfway through the march Hitler gets word that the Bavarian police had turned on Rohm and his SA brown shirts so Hitler decided to march to Rohm's aid, as they came out of the narrow streets they were blocked by lines of Bavarian police on Residenzstraße by the side of the Feldherrnhalle.

Just before reaching the Odeonsplatz, Ulrich Graf steps forward and shouts, "Don't shoot! His Excellency General Ludendorff is with us!" The police levelled their bayonets and pistols and start clubbing people.

A shot rings out. Whoever the shooter is, police or Nazi Scott can't see make out and just then a police Feldwebel slumps down dead. For a brief moment, silence falls on both parties. Angered, the police open fire with a ragged burst of their carbines and Kar rifles.

Adolf Hitler has linked arms with his comrades in the second row, and Hitler's friend and bodyguard Ernst Scheuber-Richter is killed and falls to the ground in the front of Hitler. Sensing the danger, as they fell Scott put his left arm around Hitler's neck using his full body weight on his shoulders forcing him down, at the same time Scott pulled Ulrich Graf in front of them both to shield them.

Graf gets shot several times, as Scott pushes Hitler to the ground he dislocated his shoulder and Scott takes a bullet to his right shoulder which threw him to the ground cracking the back of his head and he was knocking him unconscious.

When Scott finally awakes he finds himself back in his kitchen on the floor. Still drifting in unconsciousness, it seems to him as he opened his eyes that someone was standing over him. He glances black, leather boots for a moment. In an eye blink, they disappear, and when Scott sit up, nobody's there.

To his amazement, he starts to realize that he must have brought back someone's legs still clad in the boots back in the white light. The gory tops of the legs were fused like they had been cut with a plasma cutter and this amuses him.

He then realizes he had been shot and the bullet had gone straight through. He fully knows of his regenerative abilities, but the bullet has to be carved out for the wound to heal properly. He heats up his trusty pocket knife he always carries with him using the gas cooker, he then burns the open wound on his shoulder to cauterize and close it.

He whinces a little, but being almost impervious to pain, he does not react much.

Scott can't wait to tell his brother James what he has done, he runs to his place to tell him what happened.

But what James tells him doesn't please Scott at all. "Scott, you have to stop making your make-believe fairy world, you can get yourself in an institute if you don't change your tune. You have to try to live out well the scarce time you have left."

Ripped of uncontrollable anger at hearing his brother's cold words, Scott suddenly head butts his brother James making his nose explode in a shower of blood that starts pouring everywhere.

While James is disorientated Scott grabs James' son Andrew with laptop in hand from the couch by force. Andrew is a renowned computer hacker, at the early age of 10 he hacked Microsoft' servers and gave himself 50000 points which then allowed him order himself 1500 optical mouses, which made him an hefty sum of money.

Scotts needs Andrew's skills for his next phase of the plan, and also grabs James' car keys, driving off with the boy in toe.

Scott takes him to the rear of Internet Jaffa Café in Mill Road which is owned by his former employer Sam Omar, from where Scott wants Andrew to hack the US government's FBI servers.

One contingency of the plan is that in the eventuality the hack is traced back to Sam he would be arrested for the crime as Scott cleverly orders Andrew to leave the evidence on the Jaffa Internet Café Internet server computer that's behind the shop counter, which will incriminate his former boss Sam Omar as a terrorist.

Scott gets Andrew to hack past the firewall, into the mainframe computer and to the American M.O.D archives, that Andrew shows Scott. Thanks to his Ubermensch abilities, Scott finds easy to memorize and remember.

When Andrew is finally in the archive, Scott takes over using the laptop after Andrew has broken through the M.O.D encrypted files and gets into the World War Two Usa and Nazi top secret plans, With Andrew's help Scott managed to steal the schematics of the Junkers Ju 390 v2 prototype, the 22 kiloton atomic bomb and the Horten Ho 229, they leave a copy of the evidence they took on the Jaffa Internet Café's server computer before they are discovered they make there get away and Scott drops Andrew off close to his dad's house not wanting another confrontation with his James Scott leaves, giving Andrew a fifty ticket for his silence.

Scott rings his daughter Sam's boyfriend Mark Philips, a very capable tattoo artist.

He asks him to tattoo the stolen schematics all over his body, it was a long, boring and itching process which took most of that night and the next day making sure each schematics was perfect and on-point, once the tattoos are finished Scott goes home dresses up in his black SS Leibstandarte Obergruppenfuhrer uniform, replaces the fuse in the fuse box and electrocutes himself in his kitchen, he returns to Berlin in 10th January 1933 but he forgets his fake papers he leaves them on his table in what's left of his kitchen.

When in Berlin Scott is spotted by the police while walking down the street. They look at him suspiciously, and stop him. "Halt! You there!" shouts the officers, Scott stops he turns to the officers and say "Can I help you with anything, meine Herren?" to which one officer coldly replies "Ja, you can start by telling me about the bogus uniform you are wearing." Scott replies "It is a SS Leibstandarte uniform, as I am one of Adolf Hitler's personal body guards here are my papers." The guards look at him with distrusts "There is no Leibstandarte, only the and the small SS, and they have a brownshirt uniform, not a black one." Scott searches in every pocket for his papers but to no avail as he has forgot them. Just then Scott realizes his fatal mistake: the SS Leibstandarte wasn't formed until the 10th November 1933, on the 10th anniversary of the Beer Hall Putsch 1923 so how will he explain his mistake. Scott is arrested with the accuse of impersonating an officer, a capital offense in Germany.

While in custody he is brought in the basement that acts as torture cellar, left to stand on a block of ice bare foot while his arms are tied behind his back and hung on a hook. Men of the police and the Stabwache SA starts to beat the life out of him, with the intention to make him talk.

During the torture that would have broken any lesser man, all Scott tells them is his name and that he is coming from the future to help Germany win the war, as Germany loses the war in his timeline. Scott also tells them he wants to make England a better place to live under German occupation. After a week of torture the police finally contacts Adolf Hitler to see what he wants done with the English spy.

When the door opens, Adolf Hitler walks in and sees a man that has been beaten to black and blue pulp, his hands tied behind his back, hanging from a hook on a beam in the roof with rope tied around his hands, and with his shoulders clearly dislocated.

Hitler thinks he recognises the man's hand and neck tattoos, he's his old English friend Scott he hasn't seen since the failed coup in 1923. Worried and enraged, Hitler orders the police to let him down, tend to his wounds, clean him up and bring him to him in his conference room. A while later. Scott is also reunited with Himmler and the other comrades. Himmler in particular promises him he will see for the police and SA officers to be punished, and also appoints him SS-Sturmbannfuhrer, one of the highest ranks of the time.

When Scott is presented to Adolf and his inner circle of generals in Hitler's conference room he tells them about the future and how he thinks he can help them to win the war over in a discussion.

The generals are amused and disbelieving with what Scott has told them, Generaloberst Hoffen says " But there is no war at the moment." Scott patiently explains 1 September 1939, 62 German divisions supported by 1,300 aircraft began the invasion of Poland. At 8pm on the same day, Poland requested military assistance from Britain and France. Two days later, in fulfilment of their April 1939 pledge to support the country in the event of an attack, Britain and France declared war on Germany.

World War II had then begun, and what Scott has tattooed on his body will change the course of history so Germany will win the war and change the world.

Scott explains he has come to 1933 so German scientists have 6 years to build the atomic bomb but the first and foremost the Jewish scientist Albert Einstein must be arrested before he leaves Germany on March 28 1933, as he is the one who helps the Americans to build an atomic bomb before Germany does, when Scott removes his shirt the German Generals are amazed at the diagrams all over his body and they start to believe in what he has to say.

Scott is now guarded around the clock by two Gestapo officers 24 hours a day 7 days per week.

In the following months his assistance and help earn him Himmler's admiration and honors, who appoints Scott as a SS General with the rank of Oberfuhrer. He also gives Scott his own SS guard cadre, with SS-Sturmbannfuhrer Stucks as his aide and handler for day-to-day operations.

Finally, on September 1933 Operation Fail Safe, Operation Thor's Hammer were implemented and ordered by Der Fuhrer Adolf Hitler.

Ireland, January of 1939 German SS and Wehrmacht operatives are secretly deployed in southern Ireland to work on farms, these farms were training camps for the IRA organization. The German operatives trained them in hand to hand combat, sabotage, guerrilla warfare, along with tactical training during this time the plan for operation hostile takeover was put into motion, like they did with Francisco Franco's militia in Spain, during the Spanish Civil War. Scott has fought valiantly in it, earning even more of Hitler's respect, several decorations such as the Spanish Cross in gold and diamonds and the rank of SS-Gruppenfuhrer, with a commission of Oberst der Reserve in the Wehrmacht.

The German invasion of Poland began on 1st September 1939. A state of emergency was declared by the Government in northern Ireland.

On the 3rd September 1939 England and France finally declare war on Nazi Germany.

The head of the IRA comes up with a plan to run a Christmas Horse Fair in Dublin, Eire, Southern Ireland, and Republic of Ireland from Saturday 16th to Saturday 23rd December. The fair would consist of show jumping cart racing which is a form of Chariot racing and show horses and presents every competitor with a healthy horse with a 'chance' in Irish Free States' great £100,000. The money are provided by the German government so people would come from miles around to have a crack at the main prize. The fair would also be a way to get 3000 men into Dublin without anyone smelling a rat or calling the English government.

The fair is going great everyone is in high spirits the IRA's cavalry men are in position tending to their horses while at the fair.

Its Friday night, 7.00 pm and the main group sets off one regiment head off to the Magazine fort while the other regiments head towards the rail station.

It's nearly 8pm they have arrived at The Dublin Magazine Fort in the west of Dublin city, north of the River Liffey within Phoenix Park. The building is located in the south-eastern part of the park, close by a wooded ridge, and has a commanding view of the surrounding area, useful for cover fire and tactical aid.

On duty was positioned a small detachment, one Non-Commissioned Officer, six men armed with rifles and one Lewis gun, one Military Policeman, a fire picket presided by one NCO and four men also equipped with rifles.

The guard party was riled-up for duty on the evening of 22 December and given precise instructions as to their duties for the next morning.

The Magazine Fort did not have its own unit troops, these were supplied from infantry units stationed in the Command area. That particular night the 7th Dublin Infantry Battalion, a reserve battalion stationed at Portobello Barracks, was responsible for supplying the guard whilst the fire picket was supplied by a unit stationed in Island Bridge Barracks.

At about 8pm the commanding officer leaves his post to head towards the city, the MP guarding the gates had to switch on the outer lights on which illuminated the entrance, then opened the inner gate and the outer gate .

This act was against standard procedure, but this was a regular occurrence for visitors arriving or leaving the fort. when the officer cleared the gate the MP closed both gates then went back to his post,

At about 8:20pm that night the son of the officer in charge, a young NCO, arrived and rang the front gates bell and was welcomed in.

At about 8:30pm the front gate bell went again the MP at the gate sees a man in civilian clothes standing there with a parcel in his hands, he sais this parcel is to be delivered to the officer in charge.

The MP replies by saying he would take the parcel in for the man as he bent down he placed the parcel on the floor to unbolt the gate just then he saw the muzzle of a black revolver pointing straight at in his face. The man then told the MP to open the gates then stand back with his hands up in the air "Do not try anything funny my bud, or I will blow your pretty face off".

At this point a IRA hit squad appears from both inside and outside the fort, taking advantage from the darkness, confiscating the weapons of the sentry and MP. After opening both gates and with threats to his life the cowardly MP run in the other direction crying for help. Another man appears from inside the fort and cracks the MP on the side of his head knocking him to the floor, then he's marched back to the gates.

The two hostages are used as human shields and forced to march into the guard room catching the remaining soldiers off guard who surrendered without a fight.

In the , a second crack team of IRA overwhelms the fire picket troops these captured troops where held prisoners until 10:10pm, during the time of their incarceration the men heard lots of heavy vehicles coming and going at around 10:10pm the IRA team locked their prisoners up in the magazine area that was now completely void of arms and ammutions.

The alarm is quickly raised at the Island Bridge Barracks when the stolen lorries failed to stop and drove through the gates. The IRA troops drive every truck off the base but only 18 lorries holds the weapons.

10-50pm a party of soldiers is dispatched from Portobello Barracks to investigate what had happened at the Fort. The soldiers capture two of the IRA hiding near the fort's entrance and the general alarm is rang.

It's now 12am, a fresh guard was sent to the Magazine Fort, their orders were to arrest of the old guard which they did.

Although this raid has been successful this night isn't over by a long shot, there is still a lot of work to be done.

During the time of the raid over 2500 strong IRA battalion cleverly disguised as British soldiers have captured Dublin's train station. It has not been an easy task, arming so much men and procure the equipment and the false uniforms, but tonight everythig is paying off.

The men start to quickly dismantle the train carriages, ripping out the bench seats, allowing for more standing room, they have also docked livestock carriages to the rear of the train to carry more personnel as possible. With every action, with every preparative, England's downfall is coming closer and closer.

There is an English speaking officer at the Dublin train station, dressed as a captain he states on the phone that he needed to speak to all the station masters who were in charge of the station guards, he called ahead from Dublin through to Belfast railway stations, he stated that he was in charge of a British garrison that was recently stationed at Portobello Barracks to which he has called ahead demanding that the rail way line to the Irish border passed between Newry and Dundalk was to be left completely open as this was a national crisis which needed swift decisive action before the capital Belfast is overrun by the IRA, he tells a story that is so unbelievable it could only be true, if they decide to check up the basis part of the story would match but this was a total bluff and could only be carried out if they believed in what he tells them.

The story he told was that the IRA had successfully raided The Dublin magazine fort, he mentioned of two IRA men left behind that were captured then interrogated these men told of a secretly formed IRA battalion heading towards Belfast to capture the capital and that they were armed with Thompson machine guns along with mortars and hundreds of thousands other small arms.

He needs the railway system as it was the fastest way to get his troops straight into Belfast and cut off the IRA attack leading them into a trap. None of his tactical plan would be possible without the use of the Dublin to Belfast line, if they accomplish their task quickly and efficiently this attack could be stopped before they capture any major tactical ground and get any advantage over the army.

If the station guards were to follow his orders without question he will request medals of valour for each of them for their part in stopping the assault on Belfast.

The station guards finally agree to do so, the officer states: "A small contingency of British troops will lead in the first train to ensure all lines are open, thus readying the way for the main column riding on the second train. Is everything clear?" to which the guards reply "Yessir !! We will clear all the lines ahead, you will find them open and while await your arrival." "Then let's get to work and not waste anymore time!" cuts off the captain.

Before the trains leave the men disable all the phone lines in the area. They don't just limit themselves to cut them, they go as far as to remove a large section as this will stop anyone trying to reconnect the cut wires if found. They then proceed to wire the station with booby traps so if anyone tries to enter or leave the station it will be blown to bloody pieces.

The first train pulls out of the station, it drives 30 minutes ahead of the second train. It has only two carriages attached inside with 96 men, on top of the first carriage there are 4 fully trained professional snipers, with the task is to clear the railway lines and stations of any personnel guarding them, dismantling phone lines and leaving booby traps at each station.

This tactical action will allow the second train with 2000 troops along with 10 tons of the arms on to drive through to Belfast unimpeded.

The other 400 IRA troops burst into houses and businesses in the surrounding areas and accommodate every transport they can get their hands on, lorries and cars they even acquire a bus, the main bulk of the men drive to their destination along with the other 10 tons of arms within stolen trucks taken from the magazine fort they head off to capture Dublin's new airport, Aer Lingus just at the time of its completion so its internal roads, car parks and electrical power and lighting are all set up and running. They encounter very few resistance for the moment, apart from some trigger-happy proprietor and constable.

In the following minutes, the cavalry is radioed, their orders are to head to the train station then guard it at all costs awaiting the backup.

Five-hundred cavalry men mount up, they charge off a crossed the fairground the punters at the fair think this is some spectacular sceptical clapping, cheering as the cavalry ride through and off, the grounds shacking beneath the horses feet as they hit the road. It sounds like thunder rolling down the street.

Some raise their rifles while the others raise their hand guns as they race street to streets making their way to the station. To some of the bystanders, this seems to be a scene from the Far West found in books.

The lorries convoy head off with a 400 men strenght, all are armed with american Thompson machine guns and thousands of rounds, they drive to the new Airport, to capture then establish the first German airbase within Ireland, which according to Scott's plan, will completely change the course of the Battle of London.

On their way to the airport they come under fire by enemies at several road blocks but they smash their way through using the trucks, cutting down the armed guards in a hail of bullets: the British were no match for the Thompson machine gun as they were only armed with rifles.

The men to the rear of the convoy take care to pick off any stragglers at the blockades as they rode through, leaving very few survivors.

When the main bulk of the 400 strong reach the airport and they find it lightly guarded by night watchmen.

Lady Luck is smiling to them, and they capture the airport with ease, securing it by 2am.

When the cavalry arrives at the station they quickly dismount, they armed themselves with better guns from the supplies left behind for them.

During this time the Luftwaffe Squadrons of fighter planes, Fallschirmsjager paratroopers along with cargo planes carrying flak guns, search lights along with other provisions to secure and hold an airfield, takes off from Ramstein Air Force Base in Germany, heading for the newly established airbase. The planes used are the Mark I prototypes, superplanes inquadrated in the Wunderwaffen Program. They however still have some flaws, as some of them lose their balance and tragically crash on landing.

It's now 3AM and the Germans come under fire from the RAF, the main bulk of Luftwaffe new fighter planes engage them while the others stay by the side of the paratroopers, there are dogfights covering the night sky and flaming and tracer bullets rain down, there's just too many Luftwaffe fighter planes for the RAF to put a dent in them also the RAF were not trained in night fighting at the time. Unsurprisingly, it was even more dangerous to dog fight at night with no moon in the sky, and the first wave of RAF gets lucky to fly back to base with no fighters lost.

During the retreat, the second wave comes in for the attack the Luftwaffe losses are minimal thanks to the state-of-the-art planes and the second wave of RAF retreats due to very low ammo and wounded pride. With the superplanes, the fate of more than one RAF ace pilot has been sealed tonight.

Now the Luftwaffe squadrons follow the plan separating into five groups and head for their destinations, during the attack three British planes are lost, the rest were followed for several mile before losing the Luftwaffe while heading back to the base.

It's now 3.30 AM and the pilots see the landing lights on the runways at the Aer Lingus facility, it's a go, and with the green light on the paratroopers descend from the skies over their destinations, and over 1000 men are successfully dropped. Along with squadrons of fighter plans, cargo planes landing at the newly acquired airbase, setting up a defensive line and a new command station, they set the anti-aircraft guns and search lights in place just in case of an attack before the first light.

Now three Luftwaffe's fallschirmsjagers squadrons comprised of 1000 men strong each are over their destinations the first drop of men concentrated in a triangle between the northern half of Lough Neagh, Divis Mountain above Belfast, capturing the air fields at Aldergrove, Langford Lodge and Nutts Corner.

At the same time, the fourth deployment of Fallschirmjagers 1000 strong was dropped near Lisburn and captured the airfield at Long Kesh and guard access road and rail links between Belfast and the south.

In the middle of that night the first train comes upon the border.

Both side are heavily armed, but at the south side of the border the four snipers make short work of the main guards as the train blows its horn twice as it comes to a stop.

The IRA men rush out of the carriages, they overwhelm the rest of the Army guards, they capture the station master and the men left guarding the station.

To prevent the call of reinforcement, they immediately cut the phone lines then booby trap the station with bombs, as they did in the previous stops.

Done that, the IRA men heads to the north border station, and by this time the second train sets off loaded with ten tons of small arms and 2000 tactically, German-trained IRA troops to follow the rail.

According to the plan, this journey should go without a hitch, if and granted the first train accomplishes its mission.

It's now 3.45 AM, and the first train is now at the north border, as the train comes to a stop on fo the sharpshooters misses one of the guards. The startled man returns fire with confusion, and the sound fo gunshot alarms the station master as he sees about 90 English troops rush from the carriages firing streams of bullets at his position but before he can broadcast a distress signal , the phone lines are cut as bullets fly through the main door. As the door swings open armed men rush in and riddle the station master with bullets as he futilely tries to defend himself by firing at the door way. As the man lies convulsing in a pool of his own blood, they captures the guards left, tie them up, then booby trap the station.

they head off to accomplish their mission where they should meet the second train around 5 minutes after they arrive at Belfast's station. The first train has managed to reach the Belfast train station, the train pull to a stop and they rush out but the place is empty, they now know the surprise factor has been compromised. Startled, the men starts to rediscuss their tactical plan.

As predicted, the second train turns up unimpeded as it arrives on time. The men dismount and set up in defensive positions, and send a search party in recognition to estimate where the enemy is located as they make their way towards the main road leading out of the station.

They come upon a couple of regiments holed behind several barricades spanned across the main roads. One of the men in the search party fires his hand gun in the air over one of the barricades to find out what sort of arms they are packing. After a moment of dead, cold silence, the night is teared up by the return fire fo rifles. The men are pleased to discover this, as it means that they have equipment's advantage. They head back to report to the english speaking captain.

The captain opts to walks towards the exit under the guise of a white flag, he has around 10 men in tow.

He shouts at full lungs force: "Who is in charge, over there? We need to talk!" to which the reply is "Why does this interest you? Are you surrendering?" "There is no surrender to be done, as we are on the same side my friend" replies the Captain with a smile "We are here to stop the IRA invasion, and we need your help, we have to join forces, and stop this fighting amongst ourselves, it will get us nowhere"

There's a real English Sergeant with some contingency of English soldiers along with some Northern Ireland soldiers behind the barricade. They have been sent there to investigate the rumours that the IRA forces have captured the railway system.

The Sergeant in charge ponders the situation for a while. It's a tense situation, and both parties are nervous and uneasy. Then the NCO breaks the silence: "Sir, I want to trust you, but it's difficult for me to do so. If you are here to stop the IRA, why did one of you men opened fire upon us?" "I am sorry about that, old chap. I did hear gun fire but I didn't know it was one of my men that started it!! You can trust my word of gentleman that when I find out who is, he will be adequately disciplined" "Trust your word of gentleman?" quips the Sergeant "I know nothing about you! You say you are English and your accent seems to be on spot, yet you could be Southern Irish for all I know"

Exasperated, the Captain opens his arms in a reconciliatory gesture "Come on my good man, don't start to say wankers. I'm not going to fight you or your men as we are on the same side. Come out into the open, let's talk like real English gentlemen, with civility and face to face" at this words, the Sergeant seems to soften up and replies "I'll give your word all the courstesy I can afford now, so I an coming out but keeping my gun, be warned" "No problem, keep your gun if that makes you feel safe".

The captain walks to the centre of the road out into the open holding the white flag, and the sergeant walks over to meet him he's still pointing his gun straight at him.

"So sergeant, brief me about what you know about this situation were in" says the officer wasting no time "Well Sir, in frank truth we haven't been told much only to investigate the possibility of an attack from an unknown enemy, possibly IRA, using the railway system. Our orders were to go to the rail station to which we heard gun fire from a long way away. I then opted to evacuate the station and establish defensive positions on the road exiting the station to halt any immediate offensive. Then you showed up at the station, Sir". The captain folds his arm and thinks over it "Ah, now I understand. Well sergeant, the entire story is more complicated than you can imagine. The IRA have put enough men to make an army, they raided the Dublin ammunitions fort semi effortlessly. The wankers got clean away with over 20 tons of small arms and they are heading to our position as we speak." he makes an effect pause, as the Sergeant widenes his eyes as he starts to realize the current situation"According to our calculations they are expected to be here within the hour, I have around 500 men under my command that rode the train with me. Sarge, let's put them to good use and get the ball rolling"

Finally convinced, the Sergeant lowers his gun and says"Fine cap'n, I relinquish my command to you. So what are your orders, Sir?"My orders are to gather your men, follow me to the station, where your men will be needed to guard, and await the reinforcements arriving by train. In the mean time we will setup defences around the town's entrance points to stop the IRA from getting any sort of foot hold on Belfast".

The sergeant runs back to his regiment, he gathers his men then orders them to follow him to the station, he shouts at them saying "More speed ,less hast!! Move it move it!! We've got no time to waste men, the fight will soon be upon us!! SO move, move!!", they follow the captain back to the station as they enter the main gates the sergeant is dumbfounded by the quantity of men they found inside. He quips to the captain "I thought you only had 500 men with you Sir. It looks like you have a hell of a lot more than 500 men" with a sudden move, the Captain wraps his arm around the sergeant's neck and says "Well old chap, it's like this: we are the IRA"

The sergeant tries to help his men by shouting "Fire, fire!! It's the IRA!" as the captain grabs him around the throat and manages to wrestle him to the ground.The sergeant's men raise their guns to fire but it's too late: the IRA are waiting for them as they are lined up like a firing squad. The first row is on one knee and the second row standing behind and in between each other allowing for more guns but in a tighter space. Their Tommy machine guns are poised straight at the Sergeant's men. In the bloodshed that follows, one can make out the sergeant's cries "No for god' sake, no!!!", as the machine gun bullets fly passing straight through their bodies. As his men are gunned down without mercy every single man slumps to the floor in a massive pool of his own blood.

Dead and wounded men are spread across the entrance to the station, anyone left alive is brutally stabbed through the heart with bayonets, with blood squirting all over as the men are put out of their misery.

The captain keeps the sergeant alive as they will need him one last time: the man is openly weeping after having seen his comrades massacred like that: "You sons of whores, I will kill you all for this!!" the IRA men have to rough him up a bit and threaten his family to make him collaborative.

The men then splits into their appointed factions, they are all aware of their orders.

The first group heads to Harland & Wolff with the mission to acquire the newly built tanks and any other weapons at the factory, while the other's quest is to capture the Prime Minister while he's residing at Stormont House, and a sub-group is to secure the House of Commons booby trapping it before return to the station.

Another group secures the railway station awaiting German reinforcements, Fallshirmjagers and elite Heer and Waffen-SS troops.

There's an IRA group for each main road entering Belfast to stop anyone entering or leaving the capital. Another uses some of the trucks in the blockade to return to the barracks to finish off any soldiers left, on their approach at the barrack gates the men get ready as the guard steps out of the gate house and walks over to the lorry. He then strikes up the customary greeting with the sergeant.

The guard greets him by saying "Greetings Sarge, how did your trip go? I take it the train station wasn't over run by IRA then, sir." he says this while chuckling to himself unaware that the sergeant has a gun stuck in his side. The NCO replies "Nah, it was a false alarm, just some scallywag kids setting off a load of the New Year's Parade fireworks. It just sounded like an attack. that's all"

The guard says "Well, in all honesty Sarge, the way they went on about it at the time, in the guard house it was like it was a full blown invasion by what we heard here. But I'm glad it wasn't anything major to worry about as waking this lot up in the barracks would have been a real nightmare." he then chuckles and jokes "You know what the rest of these grumpy bastards are like when cutting their beauty sleep"the sarge laughs and says"Yes, you know don't you? But nah just fireworks just fireworks, my good friend""I'm glad everything's ok, come on in, I will open the gates for you".

The lorries have successfully gained access to the barracks through deceptive means, and the last one drives through the gates.

One of the men wastes no time on the surprise effect and throws two hand grenades into the guard house's open door and into the century point. As the gates are being shut the grenades explodes in a volley of fire and shards.

The IRA militiamen dismount the trucks and take up defensive positions.

The alarm's siren is sound as the hand grenades are thrown towards the men's quarters, and the doors get blow open. The IRA men rush in and mow down anyone inside. The unarmed soldiers didn't have time to get dressed, let alone time to run to the armoury to arm themselves, and they all die in their white pajamas stained red by their own blood.

Even the men fully dressed and on guard at century point are also taken by surprise and didn't even get a chance to fire their Lewis guns, as they get blown in bloody pieces and gore by the several hand grenades thrown at their position.

On a tactical note, the capture of the barracks has been clinically clean and fast, and by first light every faction has captured their objective and are in position.

In the distance it's now possible to hear the newly acquired tanks rolling down the streets heading towards the main road blockades and the train station, at the same time the first German forces arrive by train.

During the first months of 1940 the Germans flew planes that regularly came under heavy fire from the RAF, nonetheless still managed to land a considerable force of artillery commando squadrons, motorised armoured infantry battalions and assault groups into the newly acquired airfields establishing their foot hold in Northern Ireland.

These divisions pushed west from Dublin through Athlone, Ballinasloe up to Galway capturing the bay at Galway. After a brief stop for arm and resupply, the Germans then pushed north to Killala, Ballina and Sligo, while other divisions along with the IRA division captured Belfast Lough.

The joint forces managed to make their way from Belfast through Derry capturing each town before securing Lough Foyle bay.

Now the German Reich alongside the IRA holds most of Northern Ireland territories and water ways, these captured bays will allow amphibious landings by the Kriegsmarine, pouring in more Wehrmacht and Waffen-SS troops to secure Northern Ireland under the joint rule of Germany and the IRA.

20th of January 1940.

Operation Thor's Hammer begins with the testing of the atomic bomb on the remote mountain range of Tatras, in Poland. A test site is established by building a prop town inhabited by live Jewish and Polish prisoners. After the ordnance is detonated, the town is utterly eradicated by the atomic fire and the living subjects that aren't incinerated on the spot die horrifically for the heat and the nuclear radiations.

10th may 1940.

Sir Winton Leonard Spencer Churchill, the then Prime Minister, takes the helm in facing the German invasion. About the same time on the German side, Scotts gets promoted to SS-Obergruppenführer und General der Waffen-SS, and also gets to command his own Waffen-SS Division, the Dutton Division. He is also put in charge to oversee the entire invasion of the country, having mastermind the take of foothold in the country for the Germans and the IRA. For this task, he is given full support from the other branches of the German Military, and by his counterparts: the Reichsmarchall Hermann Goering and the the Heer Feldmarschall Albert Kesselring.

May 1940.

The world get to see the true vision of the german Blitzkrieg principle.

From the Arden forest through the beaches and the harbour of Dunkirk, the beach was presided by a large numbers of British, French, and Belgian troops. They got surrounded by the German Heer and the Waffen-SS during the Battle of France. The British, French and Canadians soldiers are all stranded with no ammunition or fuel, or even vehicles to protect them. If Dunkirk, also called Dunquerque by the Frenchs is captured it will leave Britain open and vulnerable to attack from the east.

This time Scott makes sure the Panzer groups and Wehrmacht troops rolls in to take the beach and harbours at Dunkirk. When the German forces overwhelm and capture the French sea defences they exploit them along with the tanks and the planes to stop the evacuation. The Allied evacuation is made up of fishing vessels that cmae from other French ports - Cherbourg, Saint-Malò, Brest, and Saint-Nazaire.

The Luftwaffe comes swooping down out of the clouds, glaring their "wolf's howl" of their mounted megaphones to further terrorize the enemy while were firing into crowds of men killing indiscriminately those trying to hide on the beach.

The Luftwaffe is also engaged in dog fighting with British RAF planes trying to protect the Allied troops that were evacuating. The first wave of bombers flew over dropping oil drums like bombs with high octane fuel mixed with crude oil on to the beaches soaking the men as the oil drums open on impact on the ground. The allied soldiers get running for cover while watching the next wave of bombers dropping incendiary bombs. What follows is hellish to say the least: the Allied soldiers burn alive, screaming until their lungs can't take it anymore.

The beach is full of charred corpses, some of them still stumbling and walking for the nerve reflexes.

This tactic has killed around 368,000 men, huddled together on the beach. The Germans captured the remaining 130,000 Allied soldiers left. Of the over 500,000 men, only 70,000 are successfully evacuated during the infighting at Dunkirk.

These men captured were marched to arbeitslager in German held territory. They were given no water or food, any that fell because of exhaustion was run over by tanks or shot in the back to ensure they were dead. Most wished to be simply shot, as being run over by the tank was a gruesome death as the tracks rolls over the body bones breaking while pushing the intestines and other innards out through the mouth before the cranium pops open. The whole affair it's similar to squeezing a tube of toothpaste.

These captured men will work for the Third Reich until they die, only being feed enough food to keep them alive which in time will make them slowly die of exhaustion.

4th June 1940. Dunkirk falls to the Germans the beach and littered with charred remains and the sea was tinted red by innards and blood.

14th June 1940. German troops triumphantly enter in Paris.

23rd June 1940. Adolf Hitler tours Paris.

1st July 1940. The build of a Top Secret Fighter Plane is commissioned by Adolf Hitler.

The plane designed and built by Prof Henrich Focke, Georg Wulf, Dr. Werner Naumann and Kurt Tank, under the project and supervision of Scott.

10th September 1940. The Luftwaffe launches in the Battle of Britain. Adolf Hitler orders air supremacy over England before the sea-land invasion.

27th September 1940. The Berlin Tripartite Treaty was signed by Adolf Hitler with Italy and Japan: the military Axis is formed.

December 1941: the Japanese bomb Pearl Harbour on December 7th. December 8th: the Americans join the war, with Presidents Frankling Delano Roosevelt making the speech "against all tyrants" in the White House's Rose Garden. 11th 1941, Germany and Fascist Italy declare war on the United States of America.

20th December 1941. Germanys squadron of bombers are sent to destroy the British military air bases and air fields. The battle is not going the way Scott planned it, as the RAF are winning air supremacy over the Luftwaffe. The fight for England is dragging on draining resources that shoul better saved on the incoming offensive against Soviet Union. On the 1st of January 1942, Adolf Hitler is no happy with Scott' strategy and it's results. Hitler gives Scott time until his own birthday in march to take England or he will sack of his post and responsibilities.

"I know you can do it, my friend" he says to Scott "But if you fail, I will have to replace you. I also have to remind you that no Obergruppenfuhrer of the SS fails his objectives and lives with his dishonor, if you catch my drift."as he says this, he hands Scott two items: a cyanide pill and a Luger pistol with one bullet. Scott understands immediately: if he fails, he is expected to take his own life to save his honor and avoid being sacked.

Scott has to think for a solution, and quickly. He remembers a documentary he watched about the U-Boats, in said documentary there was a French man called Jacques Stoskopf, who was a double agent. Feigning collaboration with the Germans, he gave valuable intel about the U-Boat positions to help England remove the threat of the wolf packs, Scott along with the help of the other Generals and his aide devises a plan to the french swine to overhear false Intel about the wolf packs. The plan goes excellently, and Stoskopf takes the bait and relays the false Intel to the British. Germany now knows that Enigma code has been broken.

The German High Command used the Enigma machine to relay a month of false Intel, they even allowed a couple of subs to be targeted by British navy fleet and sink them while only manned by a skeleton crew, whose faithful and courageous members volunteered to sacrifice their life for the higher values of the Third Reich, These men thought bravely to adopterate tricks to fool the British fleet by faking large oil slicks along with some clothing and debris to float up to the surface to make it look like they took a direct hit from the depth charges.

When the fleet finally moved away, they surface and go in for the attack. The "aktion" manages to cripple one carrier before they are destroyed by the sea-to-depth cannons. After the sinking of two German subs the British Royal Navy fleet' spirits where at an all-time high, and the sense of victory dulls them in false security. They manage to intercept an order for 20 submarines to meet up at a secret destination to strike at the heart of the British merchant shipping fleet and destroy them; cutting off the British supply line and crippling the overall war effort.

A large section of the Royal Navy proceeds to the specified time and coordinates relayed in the message. As the fleet approach their destination there's a ping on the sonar.

The Radio operator of the Valiant Battleship calls up the Captain: "Captain, I'm picking up a very small German carrier on the sonar and its heading in our direction. Sir?" the captain looks up, then ponder for a second "Keep an eye on it, if it gets any closer sound the alarm then I will personally blow it out of the water. Darn Germans, what in the heavens are they up to..."

Nearby on the German carrier, its men are preparing a single seater prototype air craft for take-off, attached to its underbelly is black cylinders that looks rather like three giant gun silencers welded together moulded within the body of a propellers-style blade, along with a hole at the end of the cylinders. In the middle is installed a huge bearing with a booster rocket attached to it.

The engineers finish fueling the plane, they remove the blocks from under its wheels, the pilot starts the engine, he drives down the run way full throttle, as the plane leaves the ship he pulls back on the stick, the bomb skims a crossed the surface of the water on take-off luckily he manages to keep control then climbs to correct altitude, now that he's airborne the carrier can pull back to a safe distance. The Royal Navy is the destination for the pilot. He's a young Luftwaffe ace, one of the best of the best, with more than 800 confirmed air kills.

Back on the Battleship Valiant, the Captain is checking the situation with the radio operator and the comm officer "What's the update on the German Carrier?" he asks smoking his pipe" Well Sir, the carrier has pulled back out of range. But the system detected a small plane picking up possibly a reconnaissance aircraft heading our way." answers the radio operator.

The Captain blows another smoke, then says: "Ok son, I'm heading to the deck. Keep me informed on the whereabouts of that plane." "Eye eye, Sir, I will do." responds the young operator. The Captain lets out a huff of impatience "You can knock that crap off, son we are not pirates. We are His Majesty' soldiers, understood?" "Yes, Captain."

The captain heads off, he grabs his binoculars then walks onto the deck. He can hear the plane's engine, sign that it must be getting near, he uses his binoculars to spot the plane he notices some sort of bomb attached to the under belly of the plane.

The Captain shouts: " Sound the alarm we are under attack; man the guns and knock that son of a good woman out the sky. C'mon lads!!"

There are men running in all direction, manning their posts, there massive anti-aircraft guns spin round into position poised waiting for the air plane to come into range, they see the plane, they open fire. The noise of the guns is deafening, shells exploding around the plane just missing it, but instead of a nose diving in for the attack to drop the bomb as the captain expected, it does the opposite. To the British's amazement, the plane climbs higher then higher, as if it's trying to get out of the reach of the ships big guns. Now the plane is like a black, little dot in the sky hardly visible to the naked eye. It has now reached a position within the centre of the fleet, the pilot disengages the clamps, as the bomb is released. The rocket ignites which scorches the underbelly of the plane, there's a whistle as it descends towards the Royal Navy's fleet, as the bomb picks up speed it starts to spin, this creates a vortex similar to a tornado.. The ships guns just can't seem to hit their target as the vortex deflects each shell acting like a shield around the bomb, which is now around three hundred feet above sea level, just then it lets off a massive sonic boom from all three cylinders at the same time, this sends an electromagnetic pulse in every direction, this sends a shock wave over the entire fleet silently disrupting the royal navy's instruments.

Yet again the Germans calculations were on spot as the water density around the German submarines was too great to affect any of their instrument's but nothing seems to happen as the bomb splashes down in the sea. That night, one could hear the Captain of the Valiant laughing his head off as he said: "Well that goes to show us that German wonder weapons aren't all that cracked up they make them to be. They wasted all that effort on duff bomb! How do those goose-stepping jerrys expect to win this war with crap like that..." his joy is short lived through, as the radio operator shouts "Captain there's something wrong with our instruments. Come quickly, please!!" "I'm on my way" shouts back the Captain, and returns to the helm.

"Tell me son, what's wrong with my ship? What happened?" " Well, Sir it's like this all the instruments have gone off all together to not-working land. We have no radar, sonar, radio, nothing but the engine seem to be working fine I just don't understand." "Well son, let's put it like this: all I can say is that wasn't a duff bomb after all, those sneaky Jerry bastards made that bomb to blind us. I do not know a cold thing in hell about what's to come but I do know we need to be prepared for the worst. I'm sure they are out there waiting to bait us into a trap and that's one thing I can't stand, a low down sneaky, cowardly trap."

The Captain gets quiet for a moment then shouts "Dame it, if it's a fight they want it's a fight they will get, put the engineers to work fix my bloody ship, pronto!!" "Yessir!"

The fleets is now blind but nonetheless heads in the general direction they were going. The intention is to make them pay and Ronda vows to destroy the German subs, hopefully they can fix their equipment while on the move,

When the fleet arrive at stated coordinate's they witness in the distance their largest supply convoy ever to date already ablaze and slowly sinking. It was truly an apocalyptic sight: there were thousands of people floating in the water, some dead some waiting to be rescued but as the fleet moves in to help the stranded men they pass over: the first line of 60 German submarines which were sitting silently deep under water in a three mile straight line. Their decks were peculiarly modified with a couple of small magnet locks, each lock is at either end of the deck and has a chain attached. At the end of each chain was a fully armed massive naval mine with magnetic tops twice the power and size of any mine to date. These mines were designed to only have five hammer fuses on top which when afloat only them fuses would show above sea level.

The subs wait until the fleet are in the range one mile away then the subs release the two magnet locks which released the two German naval mines for each. Chained to each end of the subs these mines blocked a three mile stretch of sea, this is to cut off the Royal Navy retreat's way. Just at the time the mines were released the Navy get their sonar back up and running, they catch the movement of the mines on their Sonar, this hit gave off the illusion that a very large number of the wolf pack were surfacing to attack.

The Battleships Rodney, the Battle Cruise Repulse, and the Battleship Resolution, Cruiser York and Destroyer V Class gets about turn to find and destroy the wolf packs, only to run into the mines that weren't there before. On hearing the first explosion which hit Battleship Resolution, another 60 submarines lying in wait release their mines along another three mile stretch of sea to cut off the other half of the advancing Royal Navy which is made up of the Battle cruiser Renown, the Battleship Valiant, the Battle cruiser Hood, the Cruiser Newcastle and the Cruiser Suffolk's, blocking them from saving any and all of the stranded people within the water.

Once the mines are in place the rear 60 submarine line up and attack from the left side holding the three mile stretch between the two rows on mines. Now the other 60 submarines line up and attack from the right side, this maneuver ties up the entire Royal Navy fleet in that three mile square blanket of ocean within the mine field.

Now that they are in position, the submarines cut off any and all exits, now the operative stage one is complete. Commences stage two, on both sides there are 10 subs out of the 60 that had X2 torpedo's held on both sides of the hull with mooring clamps. On top of the torpedo's was a frogman, these manual guided torpedo's had a glass shield in front of the frogman's head on it was making that would line up with the bottom of the boat this would indicate it was a safe distance to bail off the torpedo to ensure it hitting its mark.

This particular tactic is inspired by the one used by the Italian "Maiali" during WWI.

Each torpedo is powered up and the respective frogman disengages the clamps, as they go they pick up speed around 40 knots. They are skimming a foot under the surface of the water, they steer their way to their targets as each target metre lines up each man bail off by letting go of the push bike handles that controlled the steering. Nearly every torpedo finds its mark, blowing holes in the sides of the ships. Flames and explosions everywhere, the British guns firing hopelessly into the water, the torpedoes explode, flames along with bodies flying through the air and down into the water.

Most of the British Royal Navy tries shooting their way through the mine field but it's too late as more torpedoes are on their way, the English Battle ships and cruisers change course and turns towards the submarines to take the fight to the Germans.

Firing shell after shell and depth charge after depth charge, it's starting to look like the Royal Navy might break through the three-mile blanket, so to stop this several submarines kapitans surface with torpedoes loaded in their tubes, at full speed they ram the ships head on, as the subs collide they tear massive holes in the side of the ships.

The kaptains and crew shouts as they land the hit and make impact "Für der Führer und der Vaterland!! Wir geben unsere Leben! Sieg Heil!! Für die Ehre des Reiches!"

Several Royal Navy ships still afloat break through the German defensive line, now it's up to what's left of the wolf packs to search and destroy any straggler. There were too many submarines.

The Royal Navy was overwhelmed in what was a futile effort, but being though as nails men they kept on fighting down to the last ship. Some tried to retreat and limp back to England but was ruthlessly hunted down and destroyed by the wolf packs.

In the post-operative briefing, the Germans assess that 33 submarines were damaged and 29 submarines were sunk. The other 58 submarines survived without a scratch on that fateful day, but the impacted the wolf packs had on the Royal Navy's fleet was devastating. This offensive crippled the main convoy of the fleet, now it's time for Scott to put his major plan in effect.

What Scott doesn't know, however, is that the vengeful British have already conferred with Stosskopf, who managed to identify Scott as the mastermind behind the whole affair.

The British, with support from the French Maquis, assemble a German-speaking hit team to track down and assassinate the SS General who caused them so much pain. To better coordinate the German War effort, Scott has taken up residence in a garish Villa near Dunkirk, France, alongside his staff.

One evening, Scott is taking a rare moment of relax, reading books and browsing his vast collection of antique firearms. Like always, two SS guards of the division under his command are vigil outside the door, manning MP40 machine guns. Every location Scott visits his full of loyal SS troops. They are such an elite section of the SS that every member is to be at least ranked SS-Oberscharführer (rank equivalent to the 1st class Sergeant in the U.S. Army) and is vetted through careful selection. Chief of staff is the now SS-Obersturmbannführer Stucks, who is also the aide de camp of Scott.

At the 10.38 AM of that evening an envoy of french diplomats and heads of industry arrives at Scott's mansion in two limousines. They have appointed a meeting with Scott regarding a possible exploitation of Jews for camp labor. In reality, they are the hit-team appointed by Stosskopf, and the meeting is a guise to take out the SS-Obergruppenführer Scott Sutton with a suicidal bomber attack. Two of the men wear a bomb-filled vest under their shirts: at the opportune moment, they will detonate themselves, killing everyone in the room.

They know that it's impossible to assassinate Scott and make it out alive, so the mission is a suicidal one. They are fully willing to sacrifice their lives, as they know that by killing Scott, they will halt the technological and tactical advantage of Germany, and have a more fair possibility against the Axis.

The men park their cars in front of the mansion, and are greeted by the SS guards: they were waiting for them. At first everything seems normal: SS-Obersturmbannführer Stucks greets the french guests and already notices something wrong: two of the industrialists seems to be uncomfortable in their clothes, and while not very evident, he seems to spot some kind of from their shirts. He says nothing, and politely escorts them to the upper floor. The men are trepidating: everything is going according to the plan.

Stucks takes his time showing the mansion to the guests, and makes a point to show them Scott's collection of antique arms and art. The men make their best to hide their impatience, and to show interest to Stuck's explanations. When he will get them to Scott?

After a good thirty-five minutes, Stucks takes them to Scott' study room. The men hide it, but they are jubilant and worried at the same time: they are about to kill Scott, but also to lose their lives.

In the antechamber, Stucks suddenly stops them. Before he can bring them to Scott, he has specific orders to frisk them., to ensure they have no weapons or bombs. This makes the men nervous: if the SS guards frisk them, they will find the bombs, and the mission will be a failure.

One of the bombers decides to try all-for-all. He slowly reaches for the detonator in his jacket's pocket: he hopes that by detonating himself, he will not only kill all the bystanders in the room, but also make the ceiling and the roof collapse, potentially killing Scott. As he reaches for the detonator, Stucks spots the sudden move and gets alarmed thinking of a weapon. Without a second thought, he draws his Luger and shoots right between the man's eyes, killing him. At his command, all the SS in the room jumps on the rest of the men, immobilizing them. The detonators and the bomb vests are soon discovered, and Stucks has the men to be taken away by the Gestapo to be tortured and interrogated. Soon the name of Jacques Stosskopf comes out, and after their usefulness is over, the would-be murderers are personally executed by Scott.

For his role in exposing the murderers and foiling the assassination, Stucks is double-promoted to the rank of SS-Oberfuhrer and is awarded the Iron Cross 1st class and the Golden NSDAP Badge.

After this Scott has Jacques Stosskopf arrested by the Gestapo, and taken to a concentration camp to be tortured. In 1944 he finally gets executed with a single bullet to the head.

20th of February 1942. The Royal Naval fleet was slowly being rebuilt but due the wolf packs destroying every and all cargo ships carryng materials bound for England , the operations gets slowed up, and consequentially it's progress.

Scott's new air planes are finally finished: his new squadron of top secret fighter planes which he affectionately nicknames the Mutter Fokkers MF 180 (the Mother of all fighter planes) and the first three Junkers Ju 390 v2 prototype long-range bombers that were modified to each carry a 22 kiloton atomic bomb. The bombs were planned to be dropped on three secret destinations. Nothing of this would have been possible if it was not for Scott stealing the plans from the Americans M.O.D. archives, which he had cleverly tattooed on his body.

Now it's a leap to the date of June 22, 1941, when Germany and its Axis allies began a massive invasion of the Soviet Union named Operation Barbarossa. About 4.5 million troops launched a surprise offesinve and are deployed from German-controlled Poland, Finland, and Romania. Hitler had long had his eye on Soviet resources. Although Germany had signed a non-aggression pact with the USSR in 1939, both sides remained suspicious of one another, and the agreement merely gave them more time to prepare for a all-but-sure war. Even so, the Soviets were unprepared for the sudden blitzkrieg attacks across a border that spanned nearly 2,900 km (1,800 mi), and they suffered horrible losses. Within a single week, German forces advanced 200 miles into Soviet territory, destroyed nearly 4,000 aircraft; and killed, captured, or wounded around 600,000 Red Army troops.

Due to the harsh Russian winter the Germans lost a vast amount of their troops but they still dug in for the winter, thinking they would starve the Russians into submission.

As an unforeseen effect, due to the lakes being frozen the Russians used the lakes to cross so they could rearm their troops with food, weapons and supplies, after January the number of Germans on the outskirts of Stalingrad grew by nearly 1000 a day bringing their own supply's food and arms. At the capital Josif Stalin, the "Man of Steel", decides to send his main forces to protect Stalingrad leaving a smaller contingency of troops guarding the capital.

He believes that the main forces of Germany would try and take Stalingrad first before heading north to Moscow, otherwise why would they build their numbers up, if their intention is not to attack?

By February of 1942, German troops were within sight of Moscow and Stalingrad, they laid siege by bombarding them with all they got but Moscow and Stalingrad still hold strong.

It's now 26th of February and the Germans are still on the outskirts of Moscow but with their main forces positioned on the outskirts of Stalingrad.

Back in Germany Operation Thor's Hammer with maiden flights has been green-lighted to set off at 12 mid-day for its 12 hour flight. Both planes hold enough fuel for the return flight destination: Washington D.C. 's White House and the Pentagon. The third plane left later at 8pm, its destination is Stalingrad. As soon as it becomes dark the newly promoted field marshal Leon Dégrelle secretly pulls the whole of his forces out of Stalingrad and heads north towards Moscow during the night all is quiet, there not even a bird singing. The Soviets wonder why there is no fighting going on, their forces push through house to house, street to street but there are no Germans, it's like a magician magically made them all disappear. Now the officers within Stalingrad gather together to prepare themselves for a possible German surprise attack. They think they have pull back to regroup then attack at first little did they know what was really coming their way.

The weather has started to warm and the lake started to thaw, now the Russians are prepared for when the Germans main forces comes next to try to capture Stalingrad.

Upon take off the atomic bombs in the bellies of the Junkers Ju 390 v2 prototypes were unarmed as a safety measure, as it was too unstable to make a take-off with armed nukes. Two hours before the destination the Bombs were primed by removing the tail cover plates, four bags of cordite gunpowder were placed inside the tail on each nuke, then the covers were bolted back on. Nonetheless, the bomb's detonation system is still not armed so the engineers now remove the three green plugs from the side of the nuke, and they replace them with three live red plugs.

This completes the systems electrical circuitry so sparks will ignite the gun powder, the atomic bombs are now live and ready to detonate.

It's now 11.50 PM the Soviets in Stalingrad hear a single air plane flying overhead. They suspect it is a German reconnaissance plane to gather Intel for the next attack.

The weather is clear the planes are flying at 52000 feet, they proceed to drop to 32000 feet , 90 seconds to their targets, all three planes open the hydraulic actuator door which fly open within minutes of each other. The engineers have done their calculations , they are over their appointed targets and the bombs are released.

They count 42 seconds in their heads: upon detonation the bombs detonates 2000 feet over the top of the White House, the Pentagon and the centre of Stalingrad, Because of the needed Strategic Precision Bombing that was required and delivered by the engineers for the night time raid, the explosions release a pocket of air. This created a flash ball hotter than the surface of the sun, gamma rays, neutrons and the break up uranium shoot outwards to form a deadly invisible radiation fields, as the fireballs expanded a blast wave pushed out more than 700mph, the thermal flash radiated heat traveling more than the speed of light. It creates temperatures as high as 4000 degrees Celsius, which is twice the melting point of steel.

People in the light and heat turned to carbon and ceased to exist, while using his special glasses the engineers reports seeing massive mushroom clouds which were about 10 miles high and 3 miles wide. The pilots all report feeling the shock waves created by the explosions and nearly losing control of their planes on returning to Germany the pilots are hailed as Heroes of the Reich, and bestowed the German Order.

Now the Germans from Stalingrad have started their push to the north to Moscow, there are divisions of German troops, both south and north of the capital they wait until the backup divisions arrive from Stalingrad. After their arrival, they are ready for the final assault to take Moscow, to capture Josif Stalin alive as now Stalingrad is destroyed, they only need to take the capital and Victory will be theirs.

27th February 1942. The United States of America reports the devastation of the bombs that were dropped on the White House and the Pentagon. President Franklin D. Roosevelt alongside his chiefs of staff died in the explosions. Brought to the brink of ruin and humiliation, the once mighty United States of America surrender and they relinquish their country to the might of Der Fuhrer Adolf Hitler and The Third Reich to save more lives from being lost in another atomic bomb attack.

Later that day the Soviet Union reports that Stalingrad is no more due a single bomb.

There is nothing like they have ever seen before was dropped at around 12 midnight.

The devastation from just one bomb killed and injured millions of Russians, now Thor's Hammers have fallen and the backup forces have arrived from Stalingrad.

Now Germany advances into Moscow from the north and south to take the capital intact in which this will be The Reich final assault on Soviet Union.

Although the Russians have secretly rearmed themselves they only left around 100,000 troops to protect Moscow. It is going to be a lot harder than the Germans expected, even though Russia's main forces were destroyed by the atomic bomb in Stalingrad.

The battle is fierce: the Russians are ready for them, the capture of Moscow is slow moving.

It has all the presages to to be a blood bath, with the German troops only moving from street to street and clearing house to house. This is more the Bolsheviks' style of fighting, as the Germans are more mechanical blitz fighters moving fast and capturing vast amounts of land every hour.

Field marshal Leon Degrelle is heading up the assault, his troops slowly push from north and south trying to encircle the Russians within the capital.

They capture a number of large pockets of resistance within the outskirts of the capital, but they can't keep prisoners so they execute them and advance. During the firefight Stalin was reported to be injured, he took two bullets to the left hip but one of his officers dragged him to safety.

They made their escape, there was one stocky Russian officer, a mountain of a man running with Stalin slouched over his shoulder. Degrelle's Waffen-SS squad gave chase but they were cut down in a hail of machine gun fire from three positions within a block of houses that the officer sought refuge to.

These houses were heavily fortified, this must be the Soviets' main stronghold, the Germans need to assault the block of houses without killing Stalin and it's not going to be pretty nor easy.

The Germans regroup for the assault on Stalin's position they try an head-on assault but it's of no use: the troops get mowed down so they wait for darkness to try again. They crawl along on their bellies hoping they wouldn't be seen but a flare is fired in the sky and illuminates them with it's red light. Now they are discovered, they all scramble running for safe cover with bullets flying all around them, some fall where they stand some make it to cover they need to come up with a different plan.

Field marshal Leon Degrelle splits his unit into four large groups: one will assault the front while one will assault the rear making enough noise to cover the other two groups that will blow through the main walls that separate the houses using satchel charges and detonators.

It's 5 AM, the Germans are in position they have picked their advantage points in the blocks of houses at the front and rear.

They start their assault from the front and back of the Soviet position by firing their four Hitler's buzzsaw machine guns at either end of the block of houses they fire mortars at the Russians position to cover up sound of the satchel charges blowing through the inner walls,

The left side's assault through the walls is going just fine, they are through 4 houses already nearly closing in on their targets but when the right sides satchel charges blows the third wall one of the engineers trips when he throw the satchel : his timing was off he blows the wrong part of the wall and the main structure of the building fell and trapped them underneath the rubble, encircling them in ruins and dust.

The left side has one wall to blow. The mood is tense, Dégrelle passes a small canteen with rum in it to his men, giving them some Dutch courage and before the wall is blown, he smiles and shouts the order to attack.

The wall is blasted open, the Waffen-SS rush in and bullets fly everywhere.

Troops from each side fall, Leon Dégrelle is at the front he has his knife drawn and stabs a Russian officer in the neck then through his chest he falls to the floor, squirting sanguine blood. Leon then draws his MP40, pulls the trigger and fires he hits the mountain of an man that saved Stalin earlier he hits him several time to the chest area but he just doesn't go down he just keeps walking forward. He's shouting "Hurrah for victory" as he runs straight into Leon he grabs him with both arms wrapping around Leon's chest. The pain he feels is like his ribs are being crushed as he stabs the Russian officer three times in the left arm, and the golem finally loses his grip, Leon stabs him again this time in the chest but he still refuses to go down, he stabs him again through his chest and nothing happens, all he can hear is him shouting "Hurrah for victory".

Once again he grabs Leon picking him up like he was a paperweight doll crushing the air from his body still shouting "Hurrah for victory" Leon manages to get his left arm free and stabs him through his ear, the handle of the knife hits the side of the Russian officers head, with the blade completely embedded in his skull. Leon twists the knife then lets go of the handle. The Russian officer falls to his knees and then slumps face first on the floor.

The Germans sweep the room but still no sign of Stalin, Leon and company advances to the staircase where they are fired upon. He throws two hand grenades up the stairs, they explode and five Soviets are thrown into the air and land downstairs. The Germans rush on the position throwing two more stielhand grenades into the top rooms, all while firing their MP40s through the doorway before entering the room.

They finally find Stalin in a corner behind a large oak table which protected him, the earlier report was correct: Stalin had been shot twice in his left leg.

Field marshal Leon Degrelle tended to Stalin. Looking at the two bullet wounds, he puts a finger in each hole to probe around causing him vast amounts of pain.

He forces Stalin under interrogation to order his naval fleet to return to docks and surrender to Adolf Hitler and The Third Reich. Even though Stalin has been captured the Red Army tries for 10 days to retake the capital but without their main officers to guide them they were fight a losing battle. On the 11th day the Russians cease their hostilities and gave themselves up, for them at least their war is now over.

Stalin, the so-called "Man of Steel" is now a shadow of his former self and the Soviet pride is shattered.

The Germans have now acquired the Russian naval fleet along with their air force to use in Operation Tigershark.

With the death of General Walther Wever in 1936, early research and development of heavy, long range bombers came to an end. Scott knows this is one of the unfortunate reasons the Luftwaffe's bombing campaigns in his timeline fell short. After General Walther Wever died Scott continued his work to ensure that the long range high altitude bombers were developed and built.

Now Scott's new planes are finally ready.

Before the offensive starts, he is appointed Stellvertreter des Reichsführers-SS (Deputy Reichsführer) and Oberst-Gruppenführer-SS. Himmler is not thrilled by the idea of giving Scott such a position, and he says to him "Remember...that is title is given to you by the Führer with my benevolence... If you fail, you will lose everything. The expulsion from the SS is the least of your worries. I will not be able to protect you, be advised"

Shortly after that, on 20th January 1942, the Wannsee Conference is established to detail the policies to be implemented in the Solution to the Jewish question. Scott is required to be there due to his position of Deputy of the Reichsführer.

The conference is to be held in the Berlin's residential suburb of Wannsee on 20 January 1942. The purpose of the conference, called by the director of the RSSHA, SS-Obergruppenführer Reinhard Tristan Eugene Heydrich, to ensure the cooperation of administrative leaders of various government departments in the implementation of the Final Solution.

The participants are the following:

Deputy Reichsfuhrer-SS und Oberst-Gruppenfuhrer Scott Sutton
SS-Obergruppenfuhrer und General der Polizei Reinhard Heydrich
SS-Gruppenfuhrer Otto Hoffman, Head of the SS Race and Settlement Main Office
SS-Gruppenfuhrer Heinrich Muller, Head of Gestapo
SS-Oberfuhrer Dr. Karl Eberhard Schongart, Commander of the SiPo and the SD in the General Government
SS-Oberfuhrer Gerhard Klopfer, Secretary of the NSDAP
SS-Oberfuhrer Dr. Joachim Marie Stucks, Chief of Gestapo and Chief of Staff of the Deputy Reichsfuhrer-SS
SS-Obersturmbannfuhrer Adolf Eichmann, Head of Referat IV B4 of the Gestapo
Recording secretary
SS-Sturmbannfuhrer Dr. Rudolf Lange, Chief of SiPo and SD, RSHA for the region of Latvia
SS-Brigadefuhrer Wilhelm Stuckart, State Secretary
Dr. Roland Freisler, State Secretary
Dr. Georg Leibbrandt, Reichsamleiter
Dr. Alfred Meyer , Gauleiter for the NSDAP
Dr. Josef Buhler, State Secretary
SS-Oberfuhrer Erich Neumann, State Secretary
Friedrich Wilhelm Kritzinger, State Secretary
Marthin Luther, Under Secretary

In a beautiful ballroom, sitting at a lavish banquet rich of fine foods and beverages, surrounded by splendid statues and piece of art, the seventeen men discuss the policies to implement to effectively vanquish the Jewish presence in Europe.

In reality, the conference is a pretext to force the policies already established by the SS on the other NSDAP branches. Adolf Eichmann has already provided the method, the gassing with the Zyklon-B gas, and the locations, the centers of Auschwitz-Birkenau, Treblinka, Chelmno and others.

Heydrich and Scott force the other participants, the non-SS members, to accept the policies and support them with their specific branches of competence, with veiled threats and plays of words.

At a certain point, SS-Oberfuhrer and Scott's main assistant Dr. Stucks , proposes to keep alive the Jews with rich acquaintances in America, as means to get fancy ransoms in money. Scott and Heydrich agree, with the condition that after the money are received, said Jews are to be liquidated like the others.

Scott also proposes a rule that has to be implemented after the war is won, in order to clear any Jewish "leftovers": even a 1/16 part of Jewish blood is enough to be declared to death. This is in order to clear definitively any trace of Jewish poison in Europe, no matter the position. Heydrich is not exactly thrilled by the idea, due to rumours about his uncertain genealogy, but Scott forces to accept it nonetheless.

After the conference is over and the night has fallen, Heydrich, Scott, Stucks and Eichmann relax to the fireplace and discuss about the success of the conference. They make a toast to their success.

The day after, Scott returns to the front.

Scott is firmly convinced that their improved manoeuvrability will allow them to have the air supremacy over the RAF on the day of the attack.

Scott knows the moment is ripe and it's the right moment to strike, due to the capture of Dunkirk and the recent devastation that the German wolf packs had on British Royal Navy. Most of their ships are still in docks being built and repaired, and only a small, reserve contingency of the British Navy joined the fight. They did not know that 115 U-Boats were lying in wait to cripple what was left of their ragtag Navy.

The landing parties are the following.

Three regiments of 7th Luftjager Division Initial landings of elite fallschirmsjager, along with gliders and seaborne troops between Hythe and Deal, and from Aycliffe to Abbots Cliff, secure the beaches below with minimal effort.

A concentrated drop of jagers within the triangle of Dover, Canterbury and Ramsgate, lands overnight in West Hougham, west of Capel le Ferne, Newingham, Arpinge, Lympne and Hawkinge. This takes the British by surprise, but the plan has not took off yet.

The 16th Army set off from Boulogne, Calais, Dunkirk, Ostend, and landed at Ramsgate, Dover and Bexhill. Their orders are to push through and secure Rochester, London and Maldon.

The 9th Army sets off from Le Havre and lands at Brighton, Portsmouth and Ventnor, their orders was to push through to Reigate, Reading, Oxford and London.

The 6th Army set off from Cherbourg and landed at Lyme Regis, their orders ware to push through to Bristol and then Gloucester.

The 17th, 21st and 55th Infantry Divisions landed on open beaches to the west of Folkstone and Hove, with instrucionts to hold the beach head once taken.

The 6th, 141st Divisions alongside of the 143rd Mountain Divisions landed between Folkstone and Dover, their mission is to climb the cliffs between Folkstone and Dover and capture all enemy positions.

All the groups are supported by small units of Scott's elite SS Division.

The German forces execute a surprise attacks between Hythe and Deal made by Special Unit 800 (Abwehr, German Military Inteligence) along with Infenterie Regiment Grossdeutschland using Feisler Storch which has the capacity to land on airstrips only needing very few yards to land.

Using the proven events of the D-Day landing, which took place on the 6th june 1944 in Scotts original timeline, he sees fit to appropriate their plan, just in reverse.

Its 3:30 AM and the pale moon is high in the sky.

There are several cruise ships that are creating a cortain of smoke across the channel to hide the advance of the Kriegsmarine's naval fleet, which comprised of 4 Aircraft carriers, 10 Battle ships, 12 Battle cruisers, 3 armoured ships, 5 Heavy cruisers, 44 Light cruisers, 158 Destroyers and torpedo boats, 115 U-Boats and numerous smaller crafts.

Those crafts comprises amphibious Personnel carriers, landing carriers for tiger VI tanks and other heavy equipment that has to dropped on the shores of Britain, amphibious panzer 4 tanks converted into flail tanks designed to explode the mines on the beach, and new, state-of-the-art amphibious Panzer Drei tanks converted in bull dozer tanks to clear a pathway for the German troops along the beaches.

For the British it was all quiet, yet the invasion was already upon them.

The lookouts didn't even notice the advance hidden within the smoke, which they have mistake for mist, and beneath the surface are two small five-man crews submarines which are fifteen metres long two metres wide.

The conditions inside the submarines are very cramped, but all this is vital to the success of Operation Tigershark: these men have been doing reconnaissance of the beaches for the past two days to find out the best places for the landing parties to land.

It's now 3.45AM the Kriegsmarine Kapitans of the submarines are listening to their radio to hear certain words to be mentioned, that will be the signal to start the operation.

They hear the signal on the radio, now Operation Tigershark is a green light, their instructions are to surface near the beach they shine a guiding light for the landing parties. Its now 4.00 AM.

The German Navy is using French and Russian ships they accrued, captured and refurbished, totaling a 2000 plus vessels.

Every one of those vessels has a load invoice: every invoice hadsa roster of names and equipment which has to go on a particular vessel in a particular order in a particular place at the correct time.

These invoices are all carefully handwritten.

The might of the 2000 strong force is now proceeding with heavy and precise bombardments provided by Kriegsmarine forces within the Dover area but also along the South coast in each direction, from Portsmouth to the Thames estuary, they bombarded British sea defences and beach heads for circa 30 minutes.

During that 30 minutes the first wave of Luftwaffe proceed to do precise bombardment with their three hundred strong Heinkel He 111. Also, Junkers Ju88 bombers fly over, they destory radars, radio towers and hammer the sea defences.

The amphibious assault is only minutes away from the drop points, the first wave of troops are sent in.

While landing their crafts the Germans see shells impacting on the surrounding sea, they hear bullets whiz past their heads so they crouch down in their vehicles and take cover.

Each wave is comprised of 6 vessels per wave and per beach. Each vessel is full of men and supplies that are unloaded within walking distance of the beaches. These vessels are like a conveyor's belt.

This has been made to effectively outnumber the defenses and to ensure some men made it a crossing the beaches.

These vessels would return to reload with men and resupply. This scheme of operation is to be done another time and other time again, until every one of the troops loads has been deployed inland.

As the bombardment falls silent the first wave of men storms the beaches.

They walked in as it was an eerie silence, not even a sound.

But the British were biding their time and the machine guns suddenly starts firing.

The British fire their heavy guns, the shrapnel from the blast is devastating within 60 feet, they are practically showering the Germans in a hell of bullets.

The Germans objective is to push enough Heer and Waffen-SS men up against the defensive positions. They rationalize that the enemy can't kill everybody, as some will get through and then more will get through and eventually they will overwhelm the defender.

The Germans are to attack as a mindless human wave, which is supposed to drown the British in bodies, flesh and bullets.

In war men are expendable and acceptable losses. The commanders always decide everyday how many men have to die in order to accomplish their objective. While that may sounds cold-hearted and inhuman, being a military commander means being able to think about the casualties as selling the lives of the men for the price of Victory.

The troops go from walking to running in a split second, some hiding behind the anti-tank defences are caught within the deadly cross fire of 100 machine gun positions on each beach, and some of them gets shredded to pieces.

The German troops call forward their own machine gunners carrying MG42 models, affectionately nicknamed Hitler's buzzsaws and Der Fuhrer's Voice.

The operators of these guns have a thick metal plate covering the front of their helmets, also these men are equipped with the very first bulletproof vest.

It is a cloth design with thin layers of metal, one placed on top of the other covering both sides of the chest and the stomach.

This is to give the machine gunner more security while manning his gun allowing him to fight even after he's been hit. These machine guns have a devastating effect due to the fact that they can fire twice the speed of any other gun on the planet.

The German Juggernauts return fire on the British machine gun nests, with the sandbags bursting as the German bullets pass through. One after the other the British machine gun posts fall, the second and third wave of men runs up a crossfort of the beaches to make room for the next wave of troops.

Those men only have one thing on their mind: to get off that beach alive.

The German troops are still being cut down by machine gun posts and mortars, also the British heavy guns are still firing. The young and old men have fear in their eyes as the Germans run a crossfort of the beaches towards them screaming "Charge!!" "Fur die Ehre des Reiches!".

The British men have been told that if the Germans ever make it to a crossfort of the beaches and capture them, they would be tortured to death.

This fear drives them to do unspeakable acts such as boys killing men indiscriminately, those young and old British men are using a cross fire pattern along the beaches so they can cover more ground, killing more German troops on the inner side.

The troops keep trying to cross the beach still returning machine gun fire by this time the beach is blood soaked.

For Germania's grace a handful of Germans make it to the first position they need to capture, allowing them to set up their own defences. When enough troops are in position, they assault with a surgical strike disabling the British sea defenses and manage to stop the onslaught.

This will allow the rest of the men to cross the beaches safely. During the attack it is possible to hear explosions from France. the British sea defences open fire on the ships and amphibious vehicles, the amphibious mine flail panzer 4 tanks hit the beaches.

These thick chains are spinning around and around, the mines explode one after the other and bits of chain get blown off in all directions. But the tanks keep going, then the amphibious bulldozers Panzer Drei tanks hit the shore to clear the beaches of anti-tank placements. This allows the rest of the German Troops to exit the landing craft then to advance up the beaches, as the main fighting forces finally make their way up the beaches, the Germans take many casualties. The men left see the second wave of three hundred Heinkel He 111, Junkers Ju88 bombers, two hundred and eighty JU87 Dive bombers, two hundred and fifty Messerschmitt Bf 109. The sight amazes and frightens them at the same time. They fly overhead to destroy air fields with the objective to cut off any air assault by the British, The cannon on the Bf 109 proves itself to be very effective against metal aircraft and is a very good anti-bomber weapon. However it is less effective against the wood and fabric structure of the early British Hurricanes, who can absorb more cannon damage than their monologue partners, the Spitfires. So the Bf 109 main targets are the Spitfires. Even though the British airfields took a good pounding a lot of the British RAF has taken off before the bombs were dropped,

The RAF has managed for twelve Squadrons of Spitfires, fourteen Squadrons of Hurricanes to take off before the runways and all the other planes were destroyed.

Their numbers totaling six hundred and twenty four fighter planes that joined the fight. Six squadrons of RAF swoops in for the attack on the Heinkel He 111, Junkers Ju88 that had dropped their payload and are flying back to France to refuel and rearm.

All the while, the Messerschmitt Bf 109's were dogfighting with the Spitfires.

The devastation of their cannons took a toll on the Spitfires: there are just too many of the Messerschmitt Bf 109's to keep them at bay, the other twenty squadrons radioed in and are told to converge on the beaches so they fly to the coast where they all meet up.

As they approach their destinations they see the third wave of 1000 Ilyushin IL-2 Sturmovik , Lavochkin La-5, Lavochkin LaGG-3 Russian planes all painted in German colours towing DFS 230A-1 transport glider operated by Luftwaffe officers, with each glider carrying 9 soldiers with equipment, Five hundred Junker JU52, Junker JU90's Troop Carriers, each carrying 12 fallschirmsjagers, flying in a Staffel of 12 aircraft broken down into 4 Vics, formation, along with 600 Messerschmitt Bf 110 towing 200 Messerschmitt me 321.

These giant gliders needs rocket boosts and three Messerschmitt Bf 110 towing every one glider, Just to take off during the flight they dropped their rocket boosts to save weight and drag each one carrying 130 men totalling 41,000 troops.

They were accompanied by 87 six-engined Messerschmitt Me 323 Gigant Cargo planes each carrying one Panzer Vier tank, two hundred and fifty Messerschmitt Bf 109's the carriers split up as they approach their drop points, the initial landings of paras, gliders and seaborne troops is between Hythe and Deal, Aycliffe to Abbots Cliff, securing the beaches below. A concentrated drop of paras within the triangle of Dover, Canterbury and Ramsgate, landing in West Hougham, west of Capel le Ferne, Newingham, Arpinge, Lympe and Hawkinge.

On the approach, the RAF pilots notice a new type of fighter plane they have never seen before. The intelligence never mentioned this and they are genuinely confused and frightened by this.

The markings on the new plane say "MF180". At the moment is present a force made up of two hundred of fighters, eighty of these planes have a black top with white underbelly.

Those particular planes are flown by Adolf Hitler's personal body guards of the SS, the Leibstandarte Adolf Hitler. These men are trained in the art of aerial combat, their nickname is the Totenkopf (Death's Head) squad. It's not just for effect: they earned this name for their brutality and sheer willingness to complete their mission in the face of death.

The other hundred and twenty are camouflaged MF 180s flown by the Luftwaffe and headed up by their commander, the Reichsmarschall Hermann Göring. These planes have the body of a Focke/Fokker Wulf 190 with an improved air-cooled engine. This particular type of engine has been retrofitted with small exhaust mufflers to increase speed and make the plane silent while in flight. Also, the wing design is from a Horton Ho model 229, and due to their shape the landing gear was slightly further back than the normal Focke Wulf 190, so they had a rear gun under the tail fitted to counter act the balance. The gun in the tail stopped the plane from nose diving when landing as did the MF180 version 1. The Luftwaffe has camouflaged his planes' top with grey paint. The plane of Hermann Göring is the only plane with a camouflaged top and a red under belly.

These planes have a delta wing shape, they have white German crosses on the wing with swastikas on the tail.

Scott nicknamed his planes the Mutter Fokkers MF 180 V-II Prototypes.

The camouflaged MF 180s were sent in to protect the Parachute Division but the black and white SS-marked MF180s and the two hundred and fifty Messerschmitt Bf 109 were the dog fighters of the Luftwaffe.

During the amphibious assault the wolf packs are waiting at their secret destination for the British naval fleet to enter the fight.

As predicted, due to the recent destruction of the British fleet, most of the carriers and watercrafts are in port being built, so only one hundred of the fleet joined the fight but the wolf packs were lying in wait alongside the French and Russians ships.

They catches the British in their trap and starts bombarding with everything they have.

Missile after missile, shell after shell, they manage to cripple the British fleet into submission, writing the final chapter of the Royal Navy's road to ruin.

The Luftwaffe camouflaged MF180s are flying between the convoy, escorting them in a manner akin to prison guards, the black Mf180s are flying above the convoy.

Reichsmarshall and WW-I ace pilot Hermann Goering is at the helm in his special camouflaged MF180, although the German planes outnumbered the British Fighter planes the courage of the British was that of a lion matched by its pride.

With sun shining to their backs the British swoop in for the kill, the black MF180s take a stream of machine gun fire to which they pull up into a steep climbs while using their rear tail machine guns to return fire.

One novice Spitfire pilot turns hard to his left to avoid the bullets, but his decision to turn hard left turns out to be a fatal mistake as he collides with two Hurricanes.

On impact all three planes bursts into flames, a fiery, ear-shattering explosion occurs. Parts of airplane debris flee in all direction damaging two Spitfires and one Hurricane, so they are forced to bail out of the fight.

Two English squadrons pull up to chase the black MF180s as the rest hits the convoy, as they lock their sites ready for the kill, 40 rear black MF180s all do an uncoordinated turn of 180 degrees and start to return fire. It's a massacre, it's like the sky is raining bullets, the English squadron don't stand a chance at the manoeuvrability and ferocity of the new German fighter planes.

This gives the Germans forces the advantage, Goering notices the three damaged British planes, the two Spitfires and one Hurricane with smoke billowing out of their engines. They have left the fight to fly to safety but Goering wants to taste blood, it's passed too long since he had really fought.

He notifies his men that he's engaging the fighters, his orders the Luftwaffe to protect the jagers convoy at all costs any pilot that fails his order will be court-martialed and punished with death for gross incompetence.

Goering leaves the convoy and start to give chase to the burning planes, he swoops in cutting down the first Spitfire, of which the right wing brakes off and the plane spirals down to the ground exploding on impact.

This excites Goring, he feels like he's young again, the daring Ace of Von Richtofen (The Red Baron)' squadron of the Great War. Excited, he wants more blood, he dives in on the remaining two planes from behind and fires a stream of bullets into the two plane as he's weaving from left to right.

The left plane turns into a steep climb while the other fly's straight ahead. Goering fires another stream of bullets and the remaining Spitfire's engine bursts into flames as the plane crash dives to the ground. Goering looks around to find the Hurricane, it has managed to loop over Goering while in its steep climb and come from behind, bullets fly by Gorings MF180 as he returns fire with his rear gun. He peppers the cockpit of the hurricane and kills the pilot blowing his face off, he leans over the controls and puts the plane into a nose dive. There is a loud explosion on impact.

Now Goering is happy and heads back to his rightful place at the helm, just then he notices two ace Spitfires heading straight for him.

They fire streams of bullets at his plane, he shows the British aces the manoeuvrability of his MF180 as he de-throttles his engine banks a hard right spinning it in a 180 degrees. He turn powers up and flies straight at them weaving left and right it's all like a game of chicken who will turn first. They nearly head on to each other, all three planes bank right just at the last second their undercarriages just misses each other as they fly by, Goring turn another 180 degrees and gives chase. The Ace pilot has the two Spitfires in his crosshairs, he fires another bust of bullets as the first one catches fire and put his plane into a steep dive to put out the flames. This one is dropped out of the fight, Goering fires another bust at the other Spitfire, it takes fire and it's pilot bails out as his plane crashes to the ground.

Goering respectfully salutes the pilot parachuting as he has put on a good fight and heads back to the convoy.; lots of skirmishes are occuring but the convoy holds strong.

The paratroopers are dropped and the gliders are released and set for landing, while parachuting the RAF shot at the men to take out as many as they can before the German Fighter planes dominate the skies.

In Georing's eyes that's not a very British thing to do, he orders the Luftwaffe MF180's Messerschmitt Bf 109's and the Messerschmitt Bf 110 to attack, his orders are to take out as many planes as they can to protect the paratroopers at all costs and if any British bails out kill them.

Those pilots are not like the one he fought against earlier, and he regards them as cowards.

The fallschirmsjagers that are on the ground start their fight with the objecitve to take the sea defences and to relieve the main fighting force on the beaches.

The Totenkopf squad shows the British pilots how manoeuvrable their brand-new planes really are in combat, every time a Spitfire or Hurricane has a MF180 in their sights the plane returns fire with their tail gun forcing the British pilot to come from a different angle. These MF180 ability to spin 180 degrees and returns fire head on is wearing thin on the British, their commanding officer thinks "How can we take them down? There is just too many of these darn planes to make a dent in the Germans defences!".

Not only there are the Messerschmitt Bf 109 with their cannons, the Messerschmitt Bf 110 have released the gliders and now they are also in the fight. The Spitfires and Hurricanes that are left retreat hoping the Totenkopf squad and the Messerschmitt's will follow, as they thought the Germans followed the British Squadron, twenty British aces are left hidden flying in the clouds. They wait until the Germans move closer in for the chase, their timing is impeccable as they dive in for the attack while the rest of the squad keeps the much reviled Totenkopf squad busy.

The Germans engage in fighting but the British aces swoop down out of the clouds onto the main bulk of the German fighter planes: their ruse has worked and they are free to attack but they are confronted by the a squadron of Messerschmitt Bf 109s and Messerschmitt Bf 110, much to their surprise and panic.

Those models may not have the manoeuvrability like the Death's Head squad's models, but they are formidable fighters, the British aces hit their target dead on the cockpits. Fifteen black MF180s are on fire with smoke billowing from their planes.

Now the aces go in for the kill at least if they can't shoot them all they will take out as many as they can in an honorable death. Due to this, fifteen MF180s are no more: some explodes in flight, others spirals down to the ground in a trail of fire and blow up on impact.

Five pilots manage to jump out their planes and pull their parachute. By this time 177 of the Me 321 gliders and 59 Me 323 Gigant six-engined cargo planes and 640 DFS 230A-1 transport gliders have landed, and they start immediately to unload their cargo of 59 Panzer Vier tanks that made it safely to the ground. There are around 28770 men that survived and about 6,000 paratroopers, these men split up into three small Panzer divisions and attacks the sea defences relieving the amphibious troops that were stranded on the beaches.

Two hundred and sixty-nine vessels along with sixty submarines were crippled or lost by the British naval fleet and sea defences before they fell.

After the mine fields were cleared and the anti-tank structure were removed.

The German fleet unloaded the Tiger Ein Tanks so the Panzer Divisions and ground troops can strike at their designated positions. Every man captured was executed on site as a "No prisoners, no surrender" policy was in effect for all the German units.

Once the sea defenses are captured the main bulk of the Panzer Divisions make their way to Reigate, Reading, Oxford and London, while the rest takes Rochester, Maldon, Bristol then Gloucester.

There are only small pockets of resistance due to the loss the British had at Dunkirk, their numbers were just a few than one hundred thousand troops comprised of battle weary troops along with old men and boys, there was not enough to stop the invasion due to the bombers that were left had returned to France, refuelled and rearmed for their blitzkrieg attack on southern Britain.

The Panzer Divisions follow the devastation of the blitz attack killing everyone in their path the main strategic places of southern Britain fell to the Germans within twelve hours of the attack.

The Luftwaffe's old and new planes have the advantage in the skies, the English RAF Eva ran out of ammo or was shot down, only a handful of English pilots return to base only to find the landing strips destroyed.

The Luftwaffe lost four hundred and eighty two planes in the assault on Britain, although the Totenkopf squad lost a few they were victorious on this day; now Britain is within Adolf Hitler's grasp.

England falls to Germany after a short two-day, hellish hand-to-hand bloodbath in which hundreds of men fell on both sides, even though there was a probability of the Germans dropping an atomic bomb on London Churchill was still defiant: he believed the Germans wouldn't destroy Buckingham palace so Churchill's England put up a fight.

Thankfully for Scott England falls on 4th of March 1942 a day before his birthday as he promised, Adolf Hitler finally has something to smile about, he decides to give Scott an award called Sieg uber England which means Victory over England.

Adolf Hitler also commission the large oil painting of the medal ceremony at Nuremberg, he also appoints Scott as joint Reichsfuhrer-SS alongside Heinrich Himmler and Reichsleiter of the NSDAP.

The ceremony takes place on the balcony of Buckingham palace.

At first, Himmler is not very happy with Scott taking the position of Reichsfuhrer-SS and has to share his second in command title, but after a night of thoughts he comes to the conclusion that a title and rank is not worth the bad blood with his friend : the most important thing is the feeling of camaraderie and the loyalty towards the Reich and the Fuhrer.

The morning after, they make breakfast together and take a photo together, with Scott in full Reichsfuhrer-SS uniform and proudly wearing is Sieg uber England medal.

The photo is published on all the Reich's journals with the caption " Die zwei Reichsfuhrers der SS – der Stolz der unsere Nation" ("The two Reichsfuhrers of the SS – the Pride of our Nation).

Ending

Scott, knowing that there still is a possibility of the watch still working, tries to return to warn Adolf Hitler about the Nokmim. He sets the watch to the noon January 1st 1945, London. Returning to his kitchen Scott electrocutes himself with the cable he always used, the temporal jump should give him enough time to set a plan in motion to beat the Nokmim. As the Die Glocke radiation feedback loop system kicks in, professor Hawking at the MOD's headquarters notices an alarm going off on the radiation tracer it, lightning up like a Christmas tree. Now professor Hawking has the digital display of the coordinates, types them down in the map system and arms the missile. Taking a long breath, he hits the fire button.

While engulfed in the light Scott feels a burning heat just as the missile hits and blows up the Die Glocke. The watch dials spin around in a daze, and unlike a normal exit from within the light he is propelled out of the light he's slammed hard into a brick wall, the time and date are now 1st March which only leaves him four weeks to beat the Nokmim.

Scott contacts and manages to meet up with Adolf Hitler. He is understandably angry at Scott for only giving him four weeks. In the most respectfully way he can, Scott explains that the watch has been malfunctioning the last couple of times he's used it so he was only going to use the watch in dier emergencies such as the one at the moment. But he humbly admits that's not a valid excuse. Scott affirms that they have to turn the short time they have to his advantage, and starts explaining: "Mein Fuhrer, time is of the essence. The less the time, the less people know, the better our situation will be. There is an internal plot to assassinate you Adolf Hitler." Hitler frowns in disbelief, but Scott goes on "And also all the Generals of the Wehrmacht and SS, and every Germanised leader around the world. Without the leaders there will be no National socialist global domination. Germany will fall if we are not successful in this final mission." Having finished his explanation, Scott is ordered to meet Adolf at 'Wolfsschanze' (the Wolf's Lair).

On his arrival at the Wolfsschanze Scott is greeted by Adolf Hitler, Reinhard Heydrich, Heinrich Himmler, Erwin Rommel, Heinz Guderian and Josef "Sepp" Dietrich. They escort him to the strategic room where the other Generals are waiting. Scott tells them what he read about the attack in the future, there isn't any real detailed description on how they attacked only that it took place on 12 noon on 20th April 1945 and that it was a worldwide assault. The operation took place while people were celebrating Adolf Hitler's birthday, and attack on Der Fuhrer and his generals at his party at Buckingham palace: it was mentioned that they were killed in a large explosion. The devices employed contained vast amounts of small steel and sharpened ball bearings used to widen the blast ratio for a maximum body count, but all the other Germanised leader were killed by manned assaults, or individual assassinations. Scott explains the Nokmim are highly skilled assassins coming from the Jewish ghettos in his time, deadlier than even the future Mossad. They tracked down over 2000 Nazi war criminals after World War II and killed them instead of apprehending them through the eyes of the law.

They wanted revenge, not justice.

Scotts explains now he has changed the course of history for Nazi Germany, but this change has also had an impact on the Nokmim. Instead of a loose band of Jewish men hunting Nazis down at the end of the war, now they are a match for any SS divisions and that these Jews will not walk blindly to their deaths in shower rooms, these Jews are viscous trained hand to hand fighting machines, they will not be easy to kill.

After listening to Scott's speech Adolf Hitler, says "Tell me, Scott: was there a traitor in our midsts in your history before your changes? Please, be honest and tell the utmost truth. Scott answers "Yes mein Fuhrer, there was one story I remember of a certain Operation Valkyrie (Operation Walküre). It was a plot to assassinate you Mein Fuhrer and take control. The mastermind was Colonel Claus von Stauffenberg along with some generals, as Stauffenberg was one of the central figures of the German Resistance movement within the Wehrmacht. For his involvement in the movement he was shot shortly after the failed attempt of Operation Valkyrie."

Alarmed and sweating, the recently promoted Major General Claus von Stauffenberg looked at Adolf Hitler and said "I do not know of this Operation Valkyrie, nor am I a traitor to you and Mein Vaterland. Remember this is his alternate time line. Perhaps its true in his time but I am a loyal servant to you Der Fuhrer"" Prove it" curtly replies Hitler "Remove your honor dagger from your belt, pin your hand to the table with the it. You have five seconds to comply and show your loyalty." he counts up to four, on the fourth second Stauffenberg pulls out his dagger, and stabs himself through his hand pinning it to the wooden table.

Scott says "Well, that was intense but in my time Claus von Stauffenberg had a patch over his left eye and his right hand was missing so what he says now could be the truth. We may trust him, but for safety he is to be confined and isolated."

He then states "I personally think this is a job for Reinhard Heydrich and his SD. Historians in my time regard him as the darkest figure within the Nazi elite; you yourself Mein Fuhrer christened him as "the man with the iron heart". If anyone can find out the leak within our ranks its Reinhard Heydrich, and I also think you should in trust your security detail in the capable hands of Heinrich Himmler."

Hearing this, Himmler is most surprised: he thought Scott was out to take his rightful place by Adolf Hitler's side, and after all he done to him he thought Scott had only hatred for him. But perhaps Scott is only there to help the greater good of the Third Reich. Only time will tell. Stauffenberg is then taken away.

During the first three weeks of arrests and interrogations Reinhard Heydrich finds out that History, no matter what timeline one is in, alongside people doesn't change, and naturally the leak is from Claus von Stauffenberg.

He is arrested and tortured to make him give up the names of his co conspirators.

It emerges that Claus von Stauffenberg, alongside Henning von Tresckow and Hans Oster confess of the Nokmim who they armed with cases of Lugers, MP40's, hand grenades, explosives and vast amounts of ball bearings for plastic explosives.

The Nokmim will be arriving in ports around the world via fishing trawlers disguised as fishermen, their guns hidden within the fish in plastic bags in the belly of the trawlers.

These "fishermen" have all pre-planned detailed missions for their strike to kill Adolf Hitler, general, NSDAP leader and head of state around the world at 12 noon.

20th April, 9AM.

Reinhard Heydrich implements Operation "Party crashers". This is his time to shine, he has set his trap, he waits for the Nokmim to strike at 12 noon, he gathered up lots of hungry Jews from the "Arbeit Macht Frei" working camps from around the world. At each of the parties there is plenty of food, wine and beer spreads was laid on the tables. The Jews and the other prisoners were disguised as German officers at each party the trap is set the time is closing in it's nearly noon.

11.50 AM.

The main party to be kept safe was Der Fuhrer's party inside there where over 1000 working Jews disguised as German officers. They were all sitting down eating the food, and drinking the wine. They were so starving the ignored everything going on around them.

The time is now dead on 12PM. In the large ballroom where people were being entertained there were four rare and precious Ming vases that was placed one in each corner of the room.

Suddenly, with one almighty blast the vases shatter simultaneously, thanks to the were on timers this shot ball bearings in a circular pattern, It's a violent and gory sight, with body parts flying all over the place, and blood splattering the walls, tinging them red.

The Nokmim charge in their legs run through and wire pull the pins out of hand grenades, which explodes killing and brutally maiming six of the Nokmim.

The explosion blasts part of the front doors off, the ten Nokmim agents left guarding the entrance run in after seeing the explosion, to their surprise they have killed there their own kind dressed as German officers. Much to their horror, they realize this is a trap, the doors blow open is the signal to release the brutal Waffen SS from their hideouts at the rear of the building to cover left and right flanks. The SS counterstrike was a complete success, swift and brutal the 10 men fought valiantly to the last man taking nearly a Waffen SS division with them. That day the Nokmim killed around 10,000 German soldiers around the world, they never gave up they never surrendered, this fight was to the death, the Jews that Reinhard Heydrich had dressed as German Officers were all shot as spies for wearing outfits of the Third Reich, the fishing trawlers were blown up out at sea, All the Nokmim around the world had their mangled rotting corpses paraded in each town in every country they attacked, and Der Fuhrer Adolf Hitler had 40,000 people from towns selected at random to be shot as reprisals at the ratio of four men per one soldier killed to ensure this will never happen again. It was truly a Shock & Awe operation, that solidified the Nazi grip on the world.

After defeating the Nokmim during their global attack on Adolf Hitler's birthday, the Nazis have finally attained total world domination.

Adolf Hitler throws a late birthday party on the 24th April 1945 and Scott is hailed the saviour of the Third Reich at the bash. The party is going well, everyone is having fun dancing, laughing and joking even though Buckingham palace has some structural damage. It's not a big problem through, the Fuhrer's top architect Albert Speer has plans to fully renovate it into the German National Socialist image. To honor Scott, the New Palace will be dedicated to him.

Scott is standing with Reinhard Heydrich having a beer, but suddenly he falls to his knees clutching his chest, he thinks he's having a heart attack. Alarmed and with tears in his eyes, Reinhard rips open Scott's tunic, then his shirt and as the buttons fall to the floor, when Scott's shirt is wide open everyone witness the pocket watch dials spinning round in a craze, the coordinates are set to zero and the watch is glowing white hot. Reinhard shouts to Scott "Scott, what do I do? Scott?!?", to which Scott feebly replies "I honestly don't know, please knock me out so I can travel back to my own time to be with my wife and kids. Heil Hitler" Reinhard grabs a gun from a guard standing nearby, he smashes Scott in the back of his head, as Scott falls to the floor a glowing white light emanates from the watch in his chest, there's an agonizing pain on his face just as he disappears.

Launched across Space and Time, Scott is pulled through a wormhole in 1945 up through and into the last remaining Die Glocke in outer space, just as two missiles simultaneously hit the Die Glocke which is spectacularly blown to pieces. The searing heat burns Scott completely down his left side and he is propelled back through the wormhole which opens in Munich, the 5th March 1923.

Irony of the Fate, Scott is teleported just outside of Adolf Hitler's favourite beer hall. An amazed and at the same time horrified crowd gathers around him. Scott is lying in the doorway on the floor as Adolf Hitler with his SA brownshirts walks out to see what all the commotion is about.

Adolf is standing over Scott when he says "Please... Help me Mein Fuhrer... Father... help me." Adolf turns to a SA brown shirt asking "Who is this man? Why did he call me Mein Fuhrer, and... father? Have him arrested and interrogated, he reeks like a madman or a spy to me."

Scott is arrested, and put under locks and key awaiting interrogation. While being tortured, Scott confesses of his plan to change his time line for Adolf Hitler's 1000 year Reich, the Gestapo see his tattoos but due to the whipping cuts and burnt skin, the scientists can't make a clear idea of them so they brand Scott as an English spy. Ironically enough, the agent who brings him to cell is SS-Sturmbannfuhrer Stucks, his other timeline adjutant.

Scott is left in jail from March 1923 through to April 1945 when Germany finally loses the war, and Hitler shoots himself alongside Eva Braun in the Führerbunker. On the 2nd of May, Germany signs the Capitulation. Scott is crushed: what he worked so hard to attain has been finally lost. He has become a shadow of his former self: gaunt, emaciated, a long flowing grey beard.

Scott is discovered by the Americans and is questioned, but he says nothing. They get a doctor to examine him, on the examination the doctors find Scott's tattoos, and proceed to alert the M.O.D..

When they see the tattoos Scott is branded a spy for the Germans, he is put on trial with the other Nazis at The Nuremberg Trials which were a series of military tribunals, held by the Allied forces of World War II.

They were most notable for the prosecution of prominent members of the political, military, and economic leadership of the Nazi Germany. The trials were held in the city of Nuremberg, Bavaria, Germany, held between 20 November 1945 and 1 October 1946, at the Palace of Justice.

The Tribunal was tasked with trying 24 of the most important political and military leaders of the Third Reich which included Scott Andrews the spy, although one of the defendants, Martin Bormann, was tried in absentia, while another, Robert Ley, committed suicide within a week of the trial's commencement. Absent from the 24 were Adolf Hitler, Heinrich Himmler, and Joseph Goebbels, all of whom had committed suicide several months before the indictment was signed.

The twelve U.S. trials before the Nuremberg Military Tribunals took place from December 9, 1946 to April 13, 1949.

The trials were:

The Doctors' Trial (9 December 1946 - 20 August 1947)

The Milch Trial (2 January - 14 April 1947)

The Judges' Trial (5 March - 4 December 1947)

The Pohl Trial (8 April - 3 November 1947)

The Flick Trial (19 April - 22 December 1947)

The IG Farben Trial (27 August 1947 - 30 July 1948)

The Hostages Trial (8 July 1947 - 19 February 1948)

The RuSHA Trial (20 October 1947 - 10 March 1948)

The Einsatzgruppen Trial (29 September 1947 - 10 April 1948)

The Krupp Trial (8 December 1947 - 31 July 1948)

The Ministries Trial (6 January 1948 - 13 April 1949)

The High Command Trial (30 December 1947 - 28 October 1948)

In total, 142 of the 185 defendants were found guilty of at least one of the charges. 25 persons received death sentences, of which 11 were subsequently converted into life sentences; 20 were sentenced to life imprisonment, 98 were handed down sentences of varying lengths, and 35 were acquitted. Four defendants had to be removed from trials due to illness, and four more committed suicide during the trials.

Scott was one of the 14 defendants left who received death sentences he was later executed for his war crimes. Ironically enough, he is also brought as a witness to other trials: one of them is of his former aide Stucks. Scott says nothing, but Stucks gets sentenced to death for his activities in the Gestapo.

The death sentences were carried out 16 October 1946 by hanging using the standard drop method instead of long drop. The U.S. army denied claims that the drop length was too short which caused the condemned to die slowly from strangulation instead of quickly from a broken neck.

Their bodies twitching, their tongues swollen, their lungs slowly suffocating from the lack of oxygen, the condemned men died of an agonizingly slow death taking from between 14 minutes to choke to death to as long as Scott's struggle for air for 28 minutes before he was pronounced dead.

The End.

Alternate Ending

Scott, knowing that there still is a possibility of the watch still working, tries to return to warn Adolf Hitler about the Nokmim. He sets the watch to the noon January 1st 1945, London. Returning to his kitchen Scott electrocutes himself with the cable he always used, the temporal jump should give him enough time to set a plan in motion to beat the Nokmim. As the Die Glocke radiation feedback loop system kicks in, professor Hawking at the MOD's headquarters notices an alarm going off on the radiation tracer it, lightning up like a Christmas tree. Now professor Hawking has the digital display of the coordinates, types them down in the map system and arms the missile. Taking a long breath, he hits the fire button.

While engulfed in the light Scott feels a burning heat just as the missile hits and blows up the Die Glocke. The watch dials spin around in a daze, and unlike a normal exit from within the light he is propelled out of the light he's slammed hard into a brick wall, the time and date are now 1st March which only leaves him four weeks to beat the Nokmim.

Scott contacts and manages to meet up with Adolf Hitler. He is understandably angry at Scott for only giving him four weeks. In the most respectfully way he can, Scott explains that the watch has been malfunctioning the last couple of times he's used it so he was only going to use the watch in dyer emergencies such as the one at the moment. But he humbly admits that's not a valid excuse. Scott affirms that they have to turn the short time they have to his advantage, and starts explaining: "Mein Fuhrer, time is of the essence. The less the time, the less people know, the better our situation will be. There is an internal plot to assassinate you Adolf Hitler." Hitler frowns in disbelief, but Scott goes on "And also all the Generals of the Wehrmacht and SS, and every Germanised leader around the world. Without the leaders there will be no National Socialist global domination. Germany will fall if we are not successful in this final mission." Having finished his explanation, Scott is ordered to meet Adolf at 'Wolfsschanze' (the Wolf's Lair).

On his arrival at the Wolfsschanze Scott is greeted by Adolf Hitler, Reinhard Heydrich, Heinrich Himmler, Erwin Rommel, Heinz Guderian and Josef "Sepp" Dietrich. They escort him to the strategic room where the other Generals are waiting. Scott tells them what he read about the attack in the future, there isn't any real detailed description on how they attacked only that it took place on 12 noon on 20th April 1945 and that it was a worldwide assault. The operation took place while people were celebrating Adolf Hitler's birthday, and attack on Der Fuhrer and his generals at his party at Buckingham palace: it was mentioned that they were killed in a large explosion. The devices employed contained vast amounts of small steel and sharpened ball bearings used to widen the blast ratio for a maximum body count, but all the other Germanised leader were killed by manned assaults, or individual assassinations. Scott explains the Nokmim are highly skilled assassins coming from the Jewish ghettos in his time, deadlier than even the future Mossad. They tracked down over 2000 Nazi war criminals after World War II and killed them instead of apprehending them through the eyes of the law.

They wanted revenge, not justice.

Scotts explains now he has changed the course of history for Nazi Germany, but this change has also had an impact on the Nokmim. Instead of a loose band of Jewish men hunting Nazis down at the end of the war, now they are a match for any SS divisions and that these Jews will not walk blindly to their deaths in shower rooms, these Jews are viscous trained hand to hand fighting machines, they will not be easy to kill.

After listening to Scott's speech Adolf Hitler, says "Tell me, Scott: was there a traitor in our midsts in your history before your changes? Please, be honest and tell the utmost truth. Scott answers "Yes mein Fuhrer, there was one story I remember of a certain Operation Valkyrie (Operation Walküre). It was a plot to assassinate you Mein Fuhrer and take control. The mastermind was Colonel Claus von Stauffenberg along with some generals, as Stauffenberg was one of the central figures of the German Resistance movement within the Wehrmacht. For his involvement in the movement he was shot shortly after the failed attempt of Operation Valkyrie."

Alarmed and sweating, the recently promoted Major General Claus von Stauffenberg looked at Adolf Hitler and said "I do not know of this Operation Valkyrie, nor am I a traitor to you and Mein Vaterland. Remember this is his alternate time line. Perhaps its true in his time but I am a loyal servant to you Der Fuhrer"" Prove it" curtly replies Hitler "Remove your honor dagger from your belt, pin your hand to the table with the it. You have five seconds to comply and show your loyalty." he counts up to four, on the fourth second Stauffenberg pulls out his dagger, and stabs himself through his hand pinning it to the wooden table.

Scott says "Well, that was intense but in my time Claus von Stauffenberg had a patch over his left eye and his right hand was missing so what he says now could be the truth. We may trust him, but for safety he is to be confined and isolated."

He then states "I personally think this is a job for Reinhard Heydrich and his SD. Historians in my time regard him as the darkest figure within the Nazi elite; you yourself Mein Fuhrer christened him as "the man with the iron heart". If anyone can find out the leak within our ranks its Reinhard Heydrich, and I also think you should in trust your security detail in the capable hands of Heinrich Himmler."

Hearing this, Himmler is most surprised: he thought Scott was out to take his rightful place by Adolf Hitler's side, and after all he done to him he thought Scott had only hatred for him. But perhaps Scott is only there to help the greater good of the Third Reich. Only time will tell. Stauffenberg is then taken away.

During the first three weeks of arrests and interrogations Reinhard Heydrich finds out that History, no matter what timeline one is in, alongside people doesn't change, and naturally the leak is from Claus von Stauffenberg.

He is arrested and tortured to make him give up the names of his co conspirators.

It emerges that Claus von Stauffenberg, alongside Henning von Tresckow and Hans Oster confess of the Nokmim who they armed with cases of Lugers, MP40's, hand grenades, explosives and vast amounts of ball bearings for plastic explosives.

The Nokmim will be arriving in ports around the world via fishing trawlers disguised as fishermen, their guns hidden within the fish in plastic bags in the belly of the trawlers.

These "fishermen" have all pre-planned detailed missions for their strike to kill Adolf Hitler, general, NSDAP leader and head of state around the world at 12 noon.

20th April, 9AM.

Reinhard Heydrich implements Operation "Party crashers". This is his time to shine, he has set his trap, he waits for the Nokmim to strike at 12 noon, he gathered up lots of hungry Jews from the "Arbeit Macht Frei" working camps from around the world. At each of the parties there is plenty of food, wine and beer spreads was laid on the tables. The Jews and the other prisoners were disguised as German officers at each party the trap is set the time is closing in it's nearly noon.

11.50 AM.

The main party to be kept safe was Der Fuhrer's party inside there where over 1000 working Jews disguised as German officers. They were all sitting down eating the food, and drinking the wine. They were so starving the ignored everything going on around them.

The time is now dead on 12PM. In the large ballroom where people were being entertained there were four rare and precious Ming vases that was placed one in each corner of the room.

Suddenly, with one almighty blast the vases shatter simultaneously, thanks to the were on timers this shot ball bearings in a circular pattern, It's a violent and gory sight, with body parts flying all over the place, and blood splattering the walls, tinging them red.

The Nokmim charge in their legs run through and wire pull the pins out of hand grenades, which explodes killing and brutally maiming six of the Nokmim.

The explosion blasts part of the front doors off, the ten Nokmim agents left guarding the entrance run in after seeing the explosion, to their surprise they have killed there their own kind dressed as German officers. Much to their horror, they realize this is a trap, the doors blow open is the signal to release the brutal Waffen SS from their hideouts at the rear of the building to cover left and right flanks. The SS counterstrike was a complete success, swift and brutal the 10 men fought valiantly to the last man taking nearly a Waffen SS division with them. That day the Nokmim killed around 10,000 German soldiers around the world, they never gave up they never surrendered, this fight was to the death, the Jews that Reinhard Heydrich had dressed as German Officers were all shot as spies for wearing outfits of the Third Reich, the fishing trawlers were blown up out at sea, All the Nokmim around the world had their mangled rotting corpses paraded in each town in every country they attacked, and Der Fuhrer Adolf Hitler had 40,000 people from towns selected at random to be shot as reprisals at the ratio of four men per one soldier killed to ensure this will never happen again. It was truly a Shock & Awe operation, that solidified the Nazi grip on the world.

After defeating the Nokmim during their global attack on Adolf Hitler's birthday, the Nazis have finally attained total world domination.

Adolf Hitler throws a late birthday party on the 24th April 1945 and Scott is hailed the saviour of the Third Reich at the bash. The party is going well, everyone is having fun dancing, laughing and joking even though Buckingham palace has some structural damage. It's not a big problem through, the Fuhrer's top architect Albert Speer has plans to fully renovate it into the German National Socialist image. To honor Scott, the New Palace will be dedicated to him.

Scott is standing with Reinhard Heydrich, Heinrich Himmler, Josef "Sepp" Dietrich, SS-Standartenfuhrer and Dr. Josef Mengele; and Rowdy the reptilian pet, they are all drinking beer and whiskey. About one hour ten minutes into the party Scott falls to his knees clutching his chest, he thinks he's having a heart attack. As Reinhard rips open Scott's tunic then his shirt, the buttons fall to the floor Rowdy circles Scott like he's a snarling dog protecting its master. Rowdy keeps everyone at bay, growling in a terrifying manner. When Scott's shirt is tore wide open everyone witness the pocket watch dials spinning round in a craze, the coordinates are set to zero and the watch is glowing white hot. Reinhard shouts to Scott "Scott, what do I do? Scott?!?", to which Scott feebly replies "I honestly don't know, please knock me out so I can travel back to my own time to be with my wife and kids. Heil Hitler" Reinhard grabs a gun from a guard standing nearby, and as he goes to smash Scott in the back of his head Rowdy suddenly grabs the gun in his mouth from Reinhard's hands with one almighty bite. The gun breaks into three part when Rowdy spits the remaining part out, and starts spinning around whipping Scott in the back of the head with his large tail, Scott falls face down on the floor a glowing white light emanates from the watch in his chest, there's an agonizing pain on his face just as he disappears within the light. Rowdy jumps into the light with him, they are both pulled through a wormhole in 1945 up through and into the last remaining Die Glocke in outer space. Just as two missiles simultaneously hit the Die Glocke which is blown to pieces, the blast intertwines both their molecules and genetical patrimony. They both pass out and get through the wormhole as one human being.

Scott is now back in Cambridge, and the date is Nov. 21, 2012.

Scott is discovered by his wife Rebecca lying on his kitchen floor. She is shocked and horrified when she sees him. The humanoid that stands before her looks like Scott but he has greeny-grey reptilian scales covering his skin, his eyes are bright green with a black slits instead of pupils, his teeth are long and sharp and his finger nails are thick black and pointed.

She phones for an ambulance and the mutated Scott is rushed to hospital. The doctors find a large brain tumour and conclude that the only course of action is to put him in an induced coma so they can operate and work on his body to save his life.

These doctors know of Scott's unique physiology and blood type. They shave his head, they cut the skin and staple it back up to simulate an operation, but all they do is keep Scott in an induced coma for four weeks as they know his body will heal by itself.

Now his doctors have stopped injecting the serum made by doctor Mengele. Just under four weeks later Scott finally comes out of the coma he is handcuffed to the bed, he sees a policeman at his bedside dressed in a similar outfit to the Gestapo in World War II, the policeman tells Scott of a story about a man from the future changing history for the greater good of the Third Reich. Broadly smiling, the SS-policeman tells him "You are that man from the future: you were successful in your mission and the glorious National Socialist Reich has attained global domination all thanks to you." Scott dubiously asks "If I've done all you say I have actually done, then why I am handcuffed?" the policeman replies with his smile wearing off "That's something for the doctors to tell you. I will call them immediately." The policeman pages the doctors and then sits back down to guard Scott.

The doctors walk in they tell Scott they have good news and bad news, the good news are that the brain tumour was successfully removed, the bad news are that they have done the Reich's law-mandated DNA test on him while he was in the coma. The test has shown that he has one sixth Jew blood running through his veins. By law, he is set for termination.

Scott is outraged and says "Who on Earth made that law? He must be fucking crazy!!" the doctor replies "Well... you did when you were Reichsfuhrer-SS back in 1942 so in hindsight you have sentenced yourself to death."

The doctor tells Scott "Because you saved the Third Reich from defeat, medicine has advanced so much alongside with full hybrid human blood and all the test results done by Doctor General Mengele in 1945. Your unique blood has been made into a miracle cure for all illnesses ranging from cancer to motor-neurone disease. The most famous non-German scientist of this time Professor General Stephen Hackings can walk again. He had possibly made a full recovery exclusively thanks to your blood."

Afterwards, Scott is put back into a coma for their plan to be successful

Scott's family is contacted by doctors they say he will never come out of his coma, and his life support machine has to be turned off it's for the best, and prevent him senseless suffering.

It's 18th Dec 2012. Scott's family turn off the life support machine, the doctors give Scott a drug to simulate death. Later that afternoon Scott awakes and he is driven under armed guards to Auschwitz Extermination camp where he is put in the shower and stripped naked, and Zyklon B is dropped through the chimney in the roof. Scott is sitting crossed legged on the floor he slows his heart rate this puts his body into "estivation," which is a similar principle to hibernation. He then turns a bright shade of pink and his body seems like he has stopped breathing, just like the millions of Jews he had sent to their death. Scott is now pronounced dead.

21st Dec 2012, the day of Scott's funeral.

His body is adagiated in a glass top casket, he is dressed in a new black SS Reichsfuhrer outfit designed by Hugo Boss, and festoned with heaps of medals and awards. The coffin is lowered into the ground, Scott's wife and kids are standing in a circle around the grave side, people who are having the cure made from Scott's blood show up at the funeral. Professor General Stephen Hackings is one of them: he is greeted by Scott's wife Rebecca "Thank you for coming it was a nice gesture and very kind of you." Stephen says "At least he's at peace now, and his legacy will live on in all the people his blood is curing such as myself." Rebecca replies "It's just a shame he never recovered to find out he fulfilled his destiny and that his real father, Adolf Hitler was so proud of him." Before she can continue, a really old, SS Oberst-Gruppenfuhrer joins them. It's Stucks, Scott's former aide, who is now well over one hundred years old. He has tears in his eyes and also want to listen to what Rebecca is saying. "His father Adolf Hitler left his two daughters with Eva Braun in 1959 while he searched the world looking for Scott but never managed find his one and only son. He died a broken-hearted old man. This story always brings a tear to my eyes..." she says as she starts to cry. "Confort yourself knowing your husband was the greatest man the world has ever seen" says Stucks mustering his words " and now he is rejoined with his father in the Hall of Heroes in the Valhalla." he then turns to professor Hawkings "I hope to meet them very soon. Scott's blood saved my body from the cyanide in London, and now I can die peacefully, knowing I will met him and Der Fuhrer very soon in Valhalla."

The funeral is at end as people are walking away.

Scott's family follows but little 8 years-old Jane stands at the grave side with her hands in her pockets. Rebecca walks back she says to Jane "Don't worry darling, daddy will always be with us, and watching over us with love." Jane replies "I know mummy, there's a little bit of daddy in all of us now." as Jane grabs her mother's hand, Rebecca notices she has drawn swastikas on both her hands just like her father had tattooed on his.

Also, Stucks gives his spoils a last Heil Hitler, and then walks away, helped by his SS aide.

Both mother and daughter walk away hand in hand, as Scott opens his eyes, and when he sees them walk away he smiles; knowing he and his family are safe.

Bonding with his reptilian brother Rowdy saved his life as the Zyklon B had no effect because he didn't inhale enough to kill him while in estivation mode; he slows his heart rate again to place himself into estivation. He watches on as the digger driver fills the grave up with mud.

When there's no more light he closes his eyes and hibernates to surface another day.

It is truly the End?

... or a New Beginning?
